Don't Be Too Cheerful
A Believing Cat
Religions Split and Grow Back Comes the Corset
—By Arthur Brisbane

Copyright, 1921.

THE Cabinet feels cheerful about the industrial outlook, and suggests that only a reduction in railroad rates is needed.

A big shipper recently told the Pennsylvania this: "If you cut your freight rate 10 per cent., it wouldn't make any difference. We are not shipping because the demand is lacking."

This country might wish less "cheerfulness" no more energetic constructive planning for what is coming. Without that planning, disagreeable things will come to disturb the cheerfulness. The government ought to know that next Winter is apt to be the worst Winter this country has ever seen, as regards unemployment and other troubles. Five million and more are idle now. The prospect of ten millions idle in Winter, with their savings gone, ought to make SOMEBODY think now. Failing that, the ten millions will make EVERYBODY think when the Winter comes.

Frank Rhoades, Pennsylvania Railroad engineer, lost his life strangely, trying to chloroform an old cat. The cat scratched and fought until the man, overcome by his own chloroform, fell unconscious and died of fumes from the broken bottle.

The cat ran. Its nine lives safe, undoubtedly convinced that a special cat providence had intervened, spilling the chloroform and killing the man. Cynics and atheists should not scoff at the cat's belief, for such a belief will undoubtedly make it a better cat. Belief in a higher power makes us careful of what we do.

The first important split has come in the Christian Science Church. A new church stands in New York to supply Mrs. Eddy's teachings "pure and undefiled." This happens in all religions that have much vitality. There are many kinds of Buddhism all worse than the original kind.

There are many kinds of Christianity, not one, perhaps, quite as good as the kind taught by Christ. Fortunately, with a religion as with a potato, you cut it into small pieces, and each piece will grow, producing a crop as good than the original potato. For, as C. S. would remark, There is no death."

Police, French [illegible] baker, says corsets are coming back. We say no, and Dr. Parsons says no. But the corsets will return—anything for a change.

Two good things you can say for corsets, if they are loose, with no steel rods in them:

They make child bearing easier. We descend from animals that went on all fours, and had a natural level support for the unborn creature. Standing up straight, while carrying the child is difficult, causing many troubles through abnormal pressure. Also, the loose maternity corset helps the mother.

Also corsets, while doing a great deal of harm, have saved many women from consumption, which usually starts in the "apices," the top part of the lungs. Men, unrestricted, breathe low down, neglecting to expand the top of the lungs, and consumption starts. Women, squeezed in the waist, must breathe at the top. That's why they have consumption less often than men.

Pittsfield, Massachusetts, forbids whipping school children with "rubber hose, straps and whips." That the public should be necessary is a disgrace. The same order authorizes "whipping on the palm of the hand with a light rattan." That's worthy of a chimpanzee.

In New York a man has just been sentenced to death for strangling his child, an insane old, who was brutally beaten on many occasions. This comes from the old-fashioned brutal notion that children should be whipped. To strike a child proves three things, ANGER, BRUTALITY and COWARDICE.

Do you suggest that chloroborence would result if there were no whippings?

In Japan no man whips his child, and no race has ever produced better disciplined citizens or soldiers, more obedient to law, to government and to family than the Japanese.

The State of New York, by majority vote of its citizens, decided to give the soldiers a bonus of ten millions.

Banks that buy the bonds of the State say they will have nothing to do with the ten million bonus bonds, because they are "unconstitutional."

Would the banks hesitate if the ten millions were going to a railroad, a street car company, or some other destination "more respectable" than a soldier out of a job?

INQUIRY BY PELLETIER UNDERWAY

Rumors Also That Attorney-General Allen Is Taking Action

REPORT INVESTORS MAKE DEMANDS

President of Concern Says He Has Not Heard of Investigation

It became known yesterday that the business of the firm of Hollister, White & Company, of No. 50 Congress street, had been taken over by a committee of its creditors.

At the same time it was learned that the affairs of the company are being investigated by District Attorney Pelletier.

It is also reported a similar investigation is being made by investigators representing Attorney-General Allen.

When asked last night whether any action was contemplated by Suffolk County officials, District Attorney Pelletier said:

"We have been investigating Hollister, White & Co. for several weeks. So far nothing has been found that proves that the method of doing business was criminal. The investigation, however, is still going on."

Asked the same question, Attorney-General Allen said he could not confirm or deny that his office was interested.

It is reported, however, that hundreds of investors in stocks and securities handled by the company have been dissatisfied for months with the manner in which the business of the company was transacted, and also with the delay in the delivery of some of the securities.

BIG INVESTMENTS.

These investors are scattered over every section of New England and the East, some of them, it is said, have placed sums as high as $10,000 with the company.

The fact that Frank S. Farmer, of Portland, Me., while bank examiner of that State investigated the affairs of the company several months ago, was learned last night. Mr. Farmer acted at the instance of a number of the investors who, it is said, paid large amounts of money to the company's agents without receiving stock certificates.

According to the Maine official the concern was urged to make good claims and as a result of the prompting of Mr. Farmer the Maine clients were satisfied.

The company, established for several years, has employed a crew of more than 100 high-salaried salesmen. Thousands of small investors, workingmen and women and factory girls, it is claimed, are among the clients.

As a result of dissatisfaction on the part of the investors, a meeting was called in Boston, attended by scores of the largest investors. At this meeting a creditors' committee was formed and instantly proceeded to take over the firm's business.

C. H. Rittenhouse & Company, Congress street auditors, who were engaged by the Penal receivers to examine the books of the financial wizard now in jail, were employed. Auditors of this company are now working night and day to straighten out the company's affairs.

F. R. Sawyer, president of the company, denies the district attorney's office is investigating his business, and says that investors are demanding undelivered securities.

"I know nothing of any investigation in progress," he declared. "Hollister, White & Company is being liquidated by its creditors and I understand the liquidation is proceeding successfully."

DENIES REPORTS.

"Investors besieging us for undelivered stock which they have paid for in full? No such thing! There may be a small amount of undelivered stock, but this is only a negligible amount.

"I have nothing to do with the affairs of the company now. I have not been actively connected with it for months. No, I do not care to say how many."

C. C. Ferris, president of the Gil-

Climb to 'Roof of World' to Be Reported Only in the Sunday Advertiser

Mount Everest, "roof of the world," will be conquered by man this Summer.

The story of the conquest will appear exclusively in the Boston Sunday Advertiser.

Twenty-nine thousand feet above the sea, higher than man has ever climbed before, the expedition of the British Geographical Society will fight its way upward—a battle against nature more difficult in many ways than a trip to the North Pole.

You, as a reader of the Boston Sunday Advertiser, will follow the scientists in their exploration of the highest mountain peak in the world.

You will live with the expedition for weeks, thousands of feet above all vegetation or animal life. You will feel, with them, the awful glare of the sun in the rarefied air by day; and the intense cold of 60 degrees below zero which replaces it at evening.

So difficult will be the ascent that 100 Indian climbers, born and reared at an altitude of 15,000 feet, and 100 mules, also accustomed to high altitudes, will be needed to assist the devoted scientists who have undertaken the trip.

The ascent of Mount Everest will rank as an outstanding feat of science. The transmission of the story of that feat to the American public will rank as a journalistic accomplishment, unsurpassed in newspaper history.

Couriers will risk their lives to bring back reports during the next few weeks—while the expedition is making its way to the highest explored peak, 17,000 feet high. The final result will be reported by cable, and later by letters and photographs —the first photographs of the "roof of the world."

Remember: The story of the climbing of Mount Everest will be published ONLY in the Boston Sunday Advertiser. The first report will probably appear early in June.

'BROWNIE' IS TOURING THE WEST

Mrs. Kennedy Bombarding Boston Friends With Postals From Oklahoma

REVELATIONS ABOUT 'PAJAMA VAMP' GROW

Brookline Flat Filled With Furs and Liquors; Oak Bluffs Amazed

"Brownie" Kennedy, alias Mrs. Lillian Kingston, so-called queen of the $100,000 motion picture revel at Minkswun Manor, North Woburn, sent letters and souvenir post cards to prominent Boston business men from various points in Oklahoma in the past week.

These communications were signed "Brownie" and "Busier." The most recent post cards announced that she was in Tulsa, Oklahoma, during the week ends. Bizarre messages were received by friends here from Oklahoma City, from Bartlesville and Tulsa. All announced that "Brownie" was in the happiest of moods, despite the prominence of her name in the sensational charges made by Attorney General Allen against District Attorney Tighe.

One wealthy young business man received a souvenir post card depicting a gushing oil well. It came from Tulsa and the message it bore said in part:

"Send me the price and I'll buy you a big little oil well. Love, From Buster."

"IN STER'S ESCAPADE."

Mrs. Kennedy's wide circle of friends in Boston have been posted on her movements in Oklahoma in the past two months. It has been the chief topic of conversation among them. They had been expecting to hear big news any day, even before the Allen-Tufts controversy brought "Brownie's" name into such unsavory prominence hereabouts.

They refer to Mrs. Kennedy's tour through the oil region as "Buster's latest escapade," and they say that she has had her share of them. She has been using the name of "Webber" in her travels through Oklahoma with her wealthy oil promoter affinity. She stopped at the Driscoll Hotel, in Oklahoma City, and gave West Fifth street, New York City as her address. She has not remained long in any place.

Some of "Brownie's" friends said last night they would not have been surprised to hear of her marriage to any time. They say she is equal to any caper and is constantly springing surprises.

Disclosures in Boston yesterday showed that "Brownie" Kennedy received generous liquor supplies from Canada whenever she needed them, and that her apartments at No. 145 Coolidge street, Brookline, resembled a saleroom at times, it was so well stocked with costly furs.

A young woman conversant with "Brownie" Kennedy's life in recent years said:

FUR COATS AND DRINKS.

"The last time I visited 'Brownie's' apartments in Brookline she had

TROOPS FIRE ON LOOTERS

Lightning Adds to Horror Causing Conflagration

TOTAL DAMAGE OVER $10,000,000

Thousands Hungry and Homeless as Waters Recede

Pueblo, Colo., June 4.—Flood waters of the Arkansas River swept through Pueblo last night and today and caused death that may total 500, and property damage in excess of $10,000,000, according to reports gathered as the flood receeds.

Morgues were opened in different parts of the city and by mid-afternoon 132 bodies had been recovered. The entire eastern and southern sections were cut off from the business section.

The Red Cross organized to aid sufferers, and C. W. Lee was named official food administrator to have charge of rationing the food available in the city.

The whole business portion of Pueblo was under six to eight feet of water this morning, but by afternoon the flood had begun to recede, disclosing a scene of devastation.

LIGHTNING SETS FIRES.

To add to the horror of last night lightning set fire to half a dozen buildings in the centre of the city. Firemen could not reach the scene, and the flood had already cut off water service.

The rising flood overturned two trains filled with passengers. The trains were Denver & Rio Grande No. 3, and Missouri Pacific No. 12.

The flooded section of Pueblo extends from Second street to the Mesa, contains a large portion of the business district.

Starting shortly after 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, fire whistles sounded the flood alarm. At that hour both the Arkansas and the Fountain were rising rapidly from the cloudbursts that prevailed in the mountains. Fire fighters took warning and gathering a few belongings, sought safety in the hills around the city. Others paid no attention to the warning. Many of these paid with their lives.

CITY IN DARKNESS.

The floods swept into the city about 4 o'clock. Police and guards drove the crowds back from the main bridges where the people had taken refuge. In half an hour water was pouring over the top of the railings of bridges and the main business section was inundated. Street cars stopped, electric lights went out.

In the darkness could be heard the roar of the onrushing waters and the crash of falling buildings. Rain was falling to add to the discomfiture. Here and there with the flashes of lightning spectators could see small houses floating about. Over in the railroad yards passenger coaches and other car equipment lay overturned. And out in the darkness could be heard the cries of the stricken women and children, all appealing for help.

Scores of men risked their lives to bring women and children to safety. The Colorado National Guard and Troop C of the Colorado Guard lent to the work of rescue. Stores of perishable foods, passenger coaches and other car equipment lay overturned. And out in the darkness could be heard the cries of the stricken women and children, all appealing for help.

Stores of perishable foods, passenger coaches and other car equipment lay overturned. And out in the darkness could be heard the cries of the men of these organizations and scores of volunteers.

Then came the fire. A flash of lightning burst. There was a crash and in the light of the next flash a building was disclosed in flames. The blaze swept through the Florence Paint Company, the gas plant, the ice plant, mowed down two big garages

RAIDERS WADE THROUGH MASH

Crowds See Dorchester Police Seize $5,000 Liquor Plant

A holiday crowd of more than 2,000 men, women and children watched a liquor raid on a barn in the rear of No. 21 Mill street, Dorchester, yesterday, in which a full fledged distillery was destroyed by Captain Herbert Goodwin, two sergeants and twenty patrolmen from Station 11. Four thousand gallons of whiskey mash was poured into the barnyard by the raiding party. When forty-two 50-gallon barrels containing mash were all emptied they were also dumped in the barnyard that Captain Goodwin and the men in the building had to send for rubber boots before they could leave.

Three men were in the building when the raiding party arrived and they were all placed under arrest. They gave their names as Morris Cohen of No. 56 Washington street, Lynn; Isadore Freeman of No. 76 Summer street, Lynn, and Abraham Rollis of No. 44 Warren street, Lynn.

When the police arrived six copper stills of thirty gallons capacity each were in operation. Thirty-five gallons of 100-proof whiskey, warm from the stills, and thirty-one empty one-gallon bottles, 200 pounds of raisins, a large quantity of prunes and other material were found. Everything in the barn except the mash, which was dumped, was confiscated by the police and taken away. Captain Goodwin estimated the value of the destroyed and confiscated goods at $5,000.

The raid called the police for three hours. It being Dorchester Day big crowds were out, and Mill street was soon thronged.

Last night it was reported the liena in the vicinity of Mill street were acting strangely.

DANCER WEARS ONLY STRING OF BEADS

Paris, June 4.—Winding in and out among the tables with a string of beads as her only clothing, Mlle. Dheryss has inaugurated nude dancing at the fashionable Precatelan Cafe in the Bois de Boulogne.

NANTASKET LINE BOAT IN UPROAR

Four Navy Men Battle With Crew After Alarming Passengers

Two United States marines and two sailors who, the police say, were under the influence of liquor, threw several hundred passengers on the Nantasket steamboat Old Colony into a panic last night, when they engaged in a fight with the ship's officers and crew.

The trouble started after the boat had left the Pemberton landing for Nantasket on the 6:30 trip. One of the men was complained of by passengers for bumping into women. William McKomisky, first mate, ordered the man below. One of the marines is alleged to have hurled a chair at the officer.

A member of the crew struck the marine and with the aid of other officers rounded up the disturbers on the lower deck. Another struggle occurred on the Nantasket landing when Sergeant Stevens and Patrolman Armour of the Hull police arrested them.

Three of the men gave the names of George M. Taupar, sailor on the U. S. S. Galveston; Samuel Metzer and Kenneth H. Cook, both of the Marine Corps and stationed at the naval magazine at Hingham. The fourth couldn't tell his name, according to the police. They will be arraigned in the Abington court tomorrow on charges of intoxication and disturbance on a public conveyance.

93 SAVED AS SHIP FLOATS

"Hard Luck" Brava Packet Pulled Off Tuckernuck Shoals

Vineyard Haven, June 4. — The jacket schooner William H. Draper was pulled off the shoals on the north side of Tuckernuck Island at 4 p. m. by the coast guard cutters Manhattan and Acushnet. She was apparently not seriously damaged and her ninety-three passengers remained on board. The Acushnet took her in tow for New Bedford.

Life savers from the Cuttyhunk and Middaket Stations, who assisted in floating the vessel said she was nine miles off her course when she struck.

The schooner was trying to make the Southern entrance to Buzzard's Bay early this morning. In the fog the navigating officer lost his bearings and the schooner struck hard on the sandy bottom off Tuckernuck before her perilous position became known. A high sea was running. The Cuttyhunk life savers put off in their power launch and offered to take off the passengers. As the sea was abating it was thought best to leave them on board.

The William H. Draper is known as "the hard luck schooner of the Brava fleet," because of her many unfortunate adventures. She is a three masted schooner and plies between the Cape de Verde Islands and New Bedford, carrying passengers and freight.

HARDINGS PICNIC ON MOTOR TRIP

Take Hamper From White House on Week-End Ride to Valley Forge

Valley Forge, Pa., June 4.—Making his first pleasure trip away from Washington since his inauguration, President Harding motored to Valley Forge today for a Sunday's visit at the country estate of Senator Philander C. Knox.

The President brought his lunch and picnicked like any other motor tourist along the wayside.

Before he had been a half hour at his destination he had shaken hands with several hundred school children, and had promised to make a public address at the Washington Memorial Chapel at the historic Valley Forge camping grounds.

Accompanied by Mrs. Harding, Senator Knox, Secretary Christian and Brigadier General Sawyer, his physician, the President left Washington at 8:38 this morning and arrived at the Knox home at 2:15 p. m., after a 110-mile run over the Maryland and Pennsylvania pikes. An hour after his arrival he got away for a golf game at the Phoenixville Country Club, and then spent the evening with his host.

SCHOOL CHILDREN WAITED.

Tomorrow the President and his party will lunch at the Knox home with Senator Penrose and Governor Sproul of Pennsylvania.

Along most of the way here from the Capital the big limousine bearing the Presidential coat of arms passed unnoticed. It treaded a path through the downtown section of Baltimore without receiving a single sign of recognition from street crowds, and went through many smaller villages similarly unnoticed.

During the latter part of the journey, however, an increasing number of people were waiting at the towns along the way to cheer the President. In several places school children lined the streets and pelted the presidential party with flowers. At the end of the journey the President's car ran between long lines of parked automobiles which screeched a welcome.

PICNIC LUNCH.

The stop for lunch was made at 11:36, where the roadway swings close to the Susquehanna River near Conowingo, Md. The veranda of a little tea house overlooking the Susquehanna rapids was chosen for the picnic grounds and the President and members of his party sat for an hour about a table there munching on the sandwiches and other picnic dishes brought from the White House kitchen in a big hamper flung behind a secret service car.

Afterward the President lingered to pet and fed a little bull terrier puptied to the tea house gate, while Mrs. Harding strolled along the river bank and picked a bouquet of daisies and anemones. The President and the puppy became warm friends, and the latter barked a dreary farewell when the White House car moved away.

EYE WITNESS' STORY OF DESTRUCTION IN CITY OF PUEBLO

SWEPT TO DEATH IN TORRENT

end then attacked the yards of the King Investment & Lumber Company. All were laid in waste.

LOOTERS FIRED UPON.

Scores of persons were detected looting stores as the flood poured its way into the streets last night. A hundred shots were fired at the looters by soldiers.

Scores of dead were discovered in wrecked buildings where their recovery was impossible because of the mass of mud and debris.

The force of the flood carried entire buildings down the stream and it is believed many of the dead were carried far down the river.

The railroad yards were left filled with mud-covered debris and broken and overturned equipment.

CARRIED OFF BY FLOOD.

Business houses inside and out were covered with the same slimy mud, and in many cases even brick buildings were undermined and wrecked.

Frame buildings in the path of the flood were swept away, in many cases carrying their inhabitants with them.

While the flood warnings had been given before dark last night, many persons did not heed them and to this is ascribed a goodly part of the death loss.

Thousands of Mexicans with their possessions on their backs were wandering through the city this afternoon with nothing to eat and no place to sleep. No gas nor drinking water were available.

A party of Pueblo business men, who assembled for a dinner at the Minnequa Club last night, still were marooned there today.

Frank Pryor, of a local furniture company, spent last night on one standing wall of his four-story building which collapsed. Rescuers were endeavoring to reach him this afternoon.

ALL NIGHT ON POLE.

Richard Phillsins was rescued from a telephone pole where he had spent the night. He was riding a horse last night when the waters overwhelmed him. The horse was drowned, but Phillsin managed to swim to the pole.

While the greater loss of life appears to have been in Pueblo, reports of damage to property continue to come from many sections of southeast Colorado. Streams, sent out of their banks by cloudbursts in the mountains, carried away farm buildings and drowned many head of cattle. Residents of the rural district adjacent to irrigation projects spent the night last night prepared to flee instantly if the impounded water broke through irrigation dams.

Railroad and highway bridges were carried away and miles of telegraph and telephone lines were laid low.

In Pueblo damage was increased by fires in the business section, started by lightning and unquenched for lack of water pressure.

DAMAGE BY FIRE.

There are three morgues. One is located on the North side where bodies are being taken. Two others have been set up on the South side of the city where bodies will be taken as soon as condition permit.

The flood was caused by the overflowing of the Arkansas and Fountain rivers.

Fires, which started during the progress of the flood, did much damage.

Suggestions have come from prominent citizens that the immediate need of Pueblo are tents, fresh water, food, bedding and milk for the babies.

The Fountain river washed out all the bridges, uprooted the tracks of railroad and trolley lines, and made wire communication out of Pueblo for a time impossible. When the flood began to recede today the great damage was disclosed.

Hundreds of families lost everything they had in their mad escape from the on-rushing waters. Identification of the dead is a slow process.

This afternoon the flood waters were receding fast on Main street.

The Armour Packing Company's local plant was practically destroyed. All the fires that were burning at daylight have been extinguished.

Victims Swept Away in Terrific Torrent

By Universal Service.

Colorado Springs, Col., June 4.—"Beyond description."

This was the dramatic comment of Charles S. Ballsback, special agent for the Santa Fe Railroad at Pueblo and first man out of the stricken city after its destruction by floods.

He declared the scenes of death and destruction at Pueblo were too terrific to be "put into words."

Ballsback reached Colorado Springs in an automobile that he drove part way over the sunken roadbed of the Santa Fe Railroad. He said:

"I saw one span of the Fourth street bridge collapse and go swirling down stream with not less than 100 persons, men, women and children, on it. The loss of life must have been terrific and I doubt if the exact number of casualties will ever be known.

"I saw three rooming houses sucked into the torrent with lights burning in every window. Scores of the occupants must have drowned like rats."

The channel of the Arkansas River, Ballsback said, at one time was from Seventh street to the Union Station, a distance of twelve city blocks.

"The business section was completely inundated," he said. "Stores, packing houses, business places of all descriptions, in fact, were flooded.

"The greatest loss of life was in three sections of the lowlands, inhabited mostly by foreigners—The Grove near Clark's Mineral Springs; the Lowlands proper and Pepper Sluice Bottoms.

"When I left the city rescue parties in row boats and other craft were patrolling all the inundated sections, seeking dead and living. The city was under martial law, with all rations being issued on orders of the military commander."

Ballsback said the military and civil authorities entrusted to him a message for Governor Shoup, calling for all possible help, but without any definite or specific request.

"The fires which caused great damage during Friday night," Ballsback continued, "had been extinguished when I left. Only the torrential rain saved the city from complete destruction by fire before the flood swept down. The fires were started in most cases by lightning and burning timbers were lifted and blown through the streets, spreading the flames through the business and residence sections.

"I spent most of the night in the Santa Fe depot at First and Union streets, about in the centre of the flooded area. This morning the water had receded sufficiently so that I was able to strip off my clothing and wade out, shoulder deep, to a point seven blocks from the depot. There I got a gasoline speeder, on which I came to Colorado Springs.

"I would have been swept from my feet in several places, except for fire hose hanging from roof tops, to which I clung in my perilous journey."

State Prepares to Rush Aid to Pueblo

Denver, June 4.—The State of Colorado today was buying provisions to relieve the stricken population of Pueblo. Colonel Patrick J. Hamrock, in command of the State rangers, has charted a train to carry tents, water and food to the suffering city.

The train will proceed as near to Pueblo as possible. Motor car trucks then will be used to transport the relief supplies into Pueblo.

DOCTORS SAY CONSTIPATION POISONS SYSTEM

The majority of people suffer from constipation, which poisons the whole system and causes coated tongues, bad headaches, foul breath; in children often results in high fever and actual illness.

These conditions may be quickly relieved by Dr. True's Elixir—the Family Laxative that has worked wonders for men, women and children since 1851.

"I have great faith in your Dr. True's Elixir. I give it to my boy. It is doing him much good and I would not be without a bottle for anything." Mrs. Joseph Boyce (Tracey Station, N. B.)

You know the symptoms of chronic constipation—sour stomach, belching, bad breath, heavy, dull eyes, constant headaches and general out-of-sorts feeling. Dr. True's Elixir will help you.—Advertisement.

WHERE HUNDREDS PERISHED AS WATER OVERWHELMED PUEBLO

PUEBLO SEA OF MUD AND WATER

Airplane View Reveals Great Devastation and Plight of Victims

Denver, June 4.—An airplane view of the Pueblo flood disaster was brought to Denver late today by William A. Kimsey, pilot, who flew to Pueblo with staff correspondents of the Associated Press and the Rocky Mountain News.

After circling above the stricken city to make an accurate appraisal of the havoc wrought by the flood, Kimsey and his passengers landed in the outskirts of Pueblo, the first persons from the outside world to reach the scene of the catastrophe.

Following his return to Denver, Kimsey detailed the conditions at Pueblo as he saw from the air and he heard of the mirom refugees who flocked about his plane after he landed at the State Fair Grounds.

"From an altitude of about 1,000 feet," said Kimsey, "the business district of Pueblo looked like a sea of mud and water. The district which I know well from other flights over the city was hardly recognizable on account of the vast piles of debris.

"The railroad station stood out as an island in a lake, but the tracks were completely submerged, and cars could be seen floating about. The waters of the Arkansas were backed up on the right bank for what appeared to be several blocks, and that section of the city between the dept and the approximate vicinity of the Valle Hotel was submerged.

"I didn't leave my plane after I landed in the city but a number of residents told me of the horrible conditions and verified my aerial observations. They said there had been no chance to start a search for the dead and the missing, but that the police lines were being formed fairly well and that the situation, which for hours was one of panic and wanton destruction by looters, was getting more controllable.

"When we got to Pueblo the city was cut right in half by the flood as it appeared impossible for those on one bank of the Arkansas to reach those on the other."

seven or eight fur coats of unusual value which she said were for sale. She said they came from New York and that she received all her furs from that city. I went there with another young girl accompanied by two business men, one of whom has been on very intimate terms with Brownie.

"They asked her to set up the drinks and she did and, believe me, she knew her business. The liquor she served was of the very highest grade and her prices were of the profiteering rate. My young man friend, who had been a frequent visitor there, told me his liquor bills at 'Brownie's' had often ranged from $500 to $1,000.

"He said 'Brownie' had often mentioned to him that she was protected by high officials and was not reluctant about mentioning names.

"Brownie has a weakness for expensive lingerie and kimonos and lounging gowns of exotic hues. She is a very stylish young woman in her street attire, but she makes her big great impression in her boudoir raiment. She is a master in color effects and her furnishings harmonize with her decollete. She surrounds herself with girls of the "broiler" type.

PAJAMA PARTIES.

"Brownie's" women friends refer to her as "the pajama vamp." She has a weakness for silk pajamas of the gaudiest hues and spends most of her time indoors attired in pajamas. She thinks nothing of entertaining parties of men thus attired. She says she is never more comfortable than when dressed in imported pajamas.

"She is a shrewd business woman and a deep student of men. Her career would make a novel. She is no 'piker.' She cultivates only men of unusual influence and means and they 'fall' for her, just as they did for Cleopatra.

"She wants to throw a spell around them. The married ones fall the hardest. The older and wealthier they are, the better they like her. She is a puzzle to many of her women friends Much prettier and younger girls are outclassed by her when she sets her cap for a man.

"Nobody knows how many homes she has broken up and how many girls have been in her employ in the various houses she has conducted in this city and elsewhere. She is the real proprietor of a swell apartment on Audubon road, and another on Beacon street. She is still paying rent for her apartments on Coolidge street, Brookline, which have been closed since she went West in February. That was nearer to being a home, if she had such a thing, than any of the other Boston apartments of late.

"Brownie' entertained police officials, City, State and National critics in Brookline and Boston. The prominence of these men and the interest shown by some of them made her quite defiant of the law. She affected like a person who had a big pull.

AMAZED OAK BLUFFS.

Information reaching Boston yesterday showed that "Brownie" Kennedy had put a big wrench in social affairs at Oak Bluffs, on Martha's Vineyard, for three years.

During that time she is alleged to have nearly wrecked the home of a wealthy man who was infatuated with her, and to have lured scores of pretty girls in their teens.

After her trip to Oak Bluffs was on June 21, 1916. She attracted notice from the start, owing to her fashionable attire. But she was slow about "mixing" with the Summer colony. She registered at the Inland Hotel as "Miss S. C. Kennedy, Boston, Mass." That was her maiden name. After a brief stay she began to take tickets at the Tivoli, the largest dance hall at Oak Bluffs. Soon after her arrival at Oak Bluffs she was visited by two girls in their teens, one of whom was blind, and both of whom were pretty. They helped "Brownie" to collect the tickets.

She rented a cottage and the three of them lived there. Gay times were held at this cottage, and finally tongues began to wag. It was not long before "Brownie" Kennedy became the moving spirit in a so-called sporty circle. Nightly parties were given at the cottage.

She was known as "Queenie" and "Goldie," and male guests of prominence clamored for invitations to her cottage. The three seasons she spent at Oak Bluffs were memorable ones and they are still talked of by the island colony.

Mrs. Kennedy's friends were all wondering yesterday whether she would soon return to Boston and "face the music." They were also wondering whether the authorities would compel her to return to face the Tufts charges. Attorney-General Allen's office is understood to have a lengthy affidavit from Mrs. Kennedy, sworn to before Attorney Henry F. Hurlburt, prior to her departure from Boston.

Her attitude in the Allen-Tufts controversy is a matter of keen speculation. Rumors have been in circulation all week to the effect that certain influences were pursuing Mrs. Kennedy for the purpose of preventing her from testifying at the Tufts hearing. This is more conjecture, however, as investigation yesterday showed. If Attorney-General Allen or his agents want her, it is said, they can obtain a writ to secure her appearance before the full Supreme Court.

The order of notice on Attorney-General Allen's bill of allegations against Tufts is returnable in the Supreme Court tomorrow. The petition filed by Attorney Melvin M. Johnson, counsel for Tufts, will be argued before Chief Justice Rugg. There was some doubt expressed last night as to whether the argument would be heard in Worcester or Boston. Attorney-General Allen has made his stand in Worcester, but Attorney Hurlburt, appearing for the State, insists that the hearing be held in Boston, as the bill of information was filed here.

MAY BE DELAY.

There are 156 interrogatories in the motion filed in behalf of Tufts seeking information relative to the thirty-two allegations in the Attorney-General's bill of complaint.

It is alleged by many that Allen furnish the list of names of the motion picture men who are alleged to have been blackmailed. It is thought that this motion is only the preliminary skirmish in a legal battle to stay the proceedings in the Tufts charges.

It is reported at the courthouse that the full hearing may not be held before Fall, although the consensus in legal circles is that so grave a matter should be disposed of at the earliest possible hour for the good of the public.

christ Company, was appointed chairman of the committee that was formed by the preferred creditors to protect their interests.

He said last night the difficulty, in his estimation, arises from the firm's activities in lending too much money to the various companies and corporations they were helping to float.

"I appreciate that several hundred thousand dollars' worth of stock remains undelivered and that investors who have paid in full are demanding their securities," he said. "It is an unfortunate state of affairs.

"Possibly some of this stock will show up in the vaults or in some other way. Any suggestion of dishonesty or fraud is news to me. Personally, I say the whole embarrassment is insufficient liquid assets.

MILLIONAIRE'S WIFE POSED AS A MAID TO ROB HOMES

ADMITS SHE STOLE FOR ADVENTURE

Police Find House of Banker J. S. Heil Packed With Looot

TRACED BY NUMBER OF AUTOMOBILE

Sedan Was Used to Transport Furniture From Residences of Victims

Chicago, June 4.—Wife of a millionaire banker—yet a brazen thief! Devoted mother of four children—but worked as a kitchen servant to commit wholesale robbery! Prominent in church circles, popular in society—

The contrasts in the double life of Mrs. Joseph S. Heil might be continued indefinitely, for the case is one of the most startling ever brought to the attention of the police in this city.

Mrs. Heil is thirty-eight years old, but appears twelve years younger. She is a charming, cultured woman, with limitless funds at her command, a beautiful home, an established position socially and her family life has been ideal.

ROBBED DOZEN HOMES.

Yet she has confessed to robbing more than a dozen Chicago residences, in the guise of a maid, and many thousands of dollars' worth of loot has been recovered in her home. Three charges of larceny are filed against her.

Prostrated in a private sanitarium, Mrs. Heil is under arrest and will be brought to trial as soon as her physical and mental conditionpermits. She is about to bear a child and the story of arrest, coupled with the dramatic circumstances of her capture, is said to have affected her mind.

This at least is the assertion of Joseph S. Heil, the banker and husband of the prisoner. Staggered by the disclosures of his wife's secret criminal career, he has never wavered in her defense. He assumed the attitude as soon as the facts were placed before him that guilty or innocent she was his wife, the mother of his children, and his place was at her side, his duty to defend her.

Mr. Heil has offered to expend his entire fortune to make restitution to the families victimized by his wife. Some of them have agreed to accept this offer and press no charges against her. Others have insisted that she should suffer the penalty of the law like a common criminal. Meanwhile, postponement of her case in court has been arranged and surgeons are preparing to performa a serious operation.

A CUNNING SCHEME.

For more than a year, Mrs. Heil confessed, just before she was put under arrest in her loot-filled home at No. 6139 Winthrop avenue, she kept up a career of crime secretly and with unfailing success, until the day she was traced and captured.

The system under which she worked was cunning and original. She advertised for maids, interviewed applicants, ascertained their names and references, then answered advertisements herself under the names and references of the young women who had sought employment from her.

She rarely remained more than a few days in any position, and when she disappeared many of the household effects that were easily movable disappeared with her. Diamond rings, brass bird cages, sets of books, lingerie, chairs, china, everything that could be piled into an automobile was taken during the absence of her employers. Mrs. Heil rarely remained in any position long enough to draw wages, and she always worked by the day, returning every evening to her own mansion, where she assumed charge of five household servants employed by herself.

When arrested, the police were satisfied that the young woman was a free lance in crime, but now they are not so sure. For among the stolen property recovered in her home was a big teakwood table that two persons would have difficulty in lifting, much less lifting. The latest theory is that the woman was connected in some way with a criminal band, and it is thought that a man directed the whole organization.

HAD PLENTY OF MONEY.

Even when explained, the woman's career of crime seems incredible. Mr. Heil allowed her a checking account of $300 a month for spending money. Her children included three well-bred handsome boys and a daughter of unusual beauty who was recently married to the son of County Commissioner George Caroian.

Yet the facts are irrefutable. Pawn tickets revealing the manner in which the pledged stolen jewelry and silver were discovered in her room—and her confession is broad enough to satisfy the most sceptical, though lacking in many details.

The woman refused to involve anyone as an accomplice. Detectives have plied her with interrogations in an attempt to learn whether she was the tool of a band of blackmailers to whose grip she might have fallen by an indiscretion. She flatly denied this.

They ought to find out if a combination of corrupt gamblers or stock speculators were using or working on her. She denied this, too, and then under the strain of continuous interrogation, collapsed.

Mrs. Caroian, her only daughter, and spokesman for the family, put forth this explanation:

"My mother had an automobile accident some time ago and through this an infection came. The late Dr. John B. Murphy operated on her. Since then there has been a wound in her limb that has not healed. Because of the accident, mother had to have all her teeth extracted.

"She has had a nurse for the last year, and her husband employs two maids and a houseman. He paid a tax this year on the income of $135,000, and last year on $58,000 income. Mrs. Heil has been in a Hillsdale sanitarium."

HUSBAND IS AMAZED.

After she had been identified by four North Side families as the maid who robbed their homes, Mrs. Heil was locked up in the Town Hall station and later transferred to Detention Home No. 1, whence her husband succeeded in obtaining her removal under bond to a sanitarium.

When Mr. Heil was informed of her arrest, he was at a meeting in his offices in the Corn Exchange National Bank, and he laughed at the statements of the police, saying:

"My wife a thief! You've made a mistake. It can't be true! Why should she, of all people, steal anything? What is there she could want that I could not provide for her? Why, gentlemen, I can cash a check for $250,000 now and get cash for it at the bank. It's absurd. You will regret my action taken now."

But he went home with the detectives and they led him to the woman men. One glance at his wife and the truth broke through all doubt in the banker's mind. He revealed from the first deeper indications of grief than were shown by the accused woman.

HOW SHE WAS CAUGHT.

Mrs. Heil's arrest followed the robbery of the home of Mrs. M. Miller at No. 642 Bittersweet place. Mrs. Miller had advertised for a maid. Two days after the advertisement was inserted Mrs. Heil answered it personally. Her dignified cultured appearance, her intelligence and quickness of action won her the place immediately.

She submitted references, but Mrs. Miller did not bother to look them up. Three days later Mrs. Miller was inviting friends of the treasure she had discovered in the form of a perfect household servant, whom she called "Hulda," the name on the references which Mrs. Heil had presented.

On the same day Mrs. Miller went downtown shopping, leaving "Hulda" in charge of the whole house for several hours. When the mistress returned the maid was gone and with her every portable object of value to the place, including two cages of canary birds.

The police department was notified. William Ogden, a neighbor, told detectives that he had seen "Hulda" drive up to the Miller home in a sedan car and fill it with household furnishings from the Miller residence. He said she seemed to be merely moving some furniture, and he did not disturb her, nor even look at the license number of the car.

The district was searched for "the perfect maid," but the search showed nothing. The robbery was checked off on the police lists as one of the long series of mysterious larcenous crimes committed by servants in the past year.

SAW HER IN THE SEDAN.

But within a week Ogden and his brother, Archibald, saw the sedan car, with "Hulda" at the wheel, speeding through Sheridan road, and this time he noted the license number. He telephoned to the police. Sergeant George Cudmore, with Detectives George Wilthoft and Adam Strauss, traced the license to Mrs. Heil on the records and went to the Heil home, where they found the automobile at the door.

The detectives rang the bell. A maid-servant appeared with a salver for their cards, then ushered them into a drawing room filled with furniture. Tapestries of richest texture overlapped one another on the walls. The furnishings represented three different periods of design and were so plentiful that the visitors' progress was temporarily blocked by them.

While they were "sizing up" the place, Mrs. Heil came downstairs in a dinner gown, serene, smiling and courteous in the extreme. Several diamond rings glittered on her fingers, her hair was coiffed in the latest mode. She was in appearance a dignified gentlewoman, somewhat puzzled by an unexpected visit.

The detectives, taken back, floundered for words, then Sergeant Cudmore blurted:

"I'm sorry, Mrs. Heil, but we are here to arrest you for burglary."

The stately figure stiffened. There was a moment's silence. The three detectives were on their feet, embarrassed yet determined. Mrs. Heil said:

"How can you come here with such a preposterous joke?"

The sergeant responded, bluntly:

"Madam, it's no joke. We have positive evidence that you are the maid that robbed Mrs. Miller's home."

The indignation faded from Mrs. Heil's cheeks as she repeated:

"You have positive evidence?"

All doubt was gone then from Cudmore's mind, and he answered:

"Yes, ma'am, and we're here to arrest you."

Mrs. Heil smiled as she said:

"Well, if you have the evidence, I suppose I did commit the robbery. Now what is to be done about it."

Very cool, very collected she was then, as Cudmore described the scene afterward. He asked for her husband Mrs. Heil said she was sorry to have to detain them, but Mr. Heil would not return from business for an hour or two. Would they wait? They would wait, they agreed, after the sergeant had sent one to telephone the information to headquarters for instructions to send a man to the husband's office.

TOLD THEM THE STORY

And, while they waited in the drawing-room, the three policemen and their remarkable prisoner went over the list of robberies committed by servants in Chicago for the last year, and followed Mrs. Heil's part in many of them.

Then she told them how easily she had operated; smiled, not without pride, at the reputation she had earned in her brief stop at various houses as "the perfect maid," and added;

"Doesn't it show that there is one woman in Chicago who can be the wife of a wealthy man, keep a position in society and keep house as well?"

Sergeant Cudmore nodded, but asked:

"But why did you become a thief as well?"

Mrs. Heil laughed.

"Oh, I craved excitement. I liked adventure, and society never did appeal to me."

The sergeant could see that part of it, but on the other hand:

"Didn't your children and their affairs supply you with excitement and adventure enough?"

Mrs. Heil was thoughtful a moment, then answered:

"No!"

Mr. Heil accompanied his wife to the station in silence. But while she was giving her "pedigree" to the police, in tears, he moaned:

"No woman in the world ever had more reason to be content than my wife. She had a beautiful home, filled with servants. She has four fine children, who love her, and she has had all the money that she cared to spend. I love her. I have refused her nothing. Now she has ruined not only her own life but mine and the lives of our children.

"I knew she was away from home frequently; she used to explain that she was attending auctions. I thought such sales were a hobby of hers and never questioned her. Yes, she would bring home automobile loads of all kinds of stuff, rugs, tapestries, silverware, furniture, linen, chairs, jewelry, bric-a-brac and tell me that she bought them at auctions.

"When I gave her $300 monthly allowance, I always asked what she had spent when she was at auctions. If she told me that she had spent $500, I always gave her a check for $600, and I suppose she has netted $1,000 a month that way in addition to her allowance.

MARY HAS HIDDEN MONEY.

"I don't know what she did with it. Mrs. Heil was not a spendthrift in the literal sense of the word. I suppose she must have the money hidden. It must amount to about $15,000 or $20,000 by this time. Oh, I don't know why she has done this thing—but I will stand by her to the end."

Meanwhile Lieutenant Sylvester was valnly trying to draw from the prisoner the real motive for her crimes. He asked if she ever played cards, and she responded indignantly:

"Cards? I never touched a card in my life. I am from Wheeling, W. Va., and women do not gamble in that city. I never played cards and I would never allow my children to touch cards, either."

They led her away to the detention cell. Detectives got busy on the long list of robberies reported in residences and telephoned the victims to meet at the Heil home. They responded in automobiles, street cars and afoot. At the end of the night many thousands of dollars' worth of furnishings in the Heil home were claimed.

FINISHED JOB IN TWO HOURS.

Mrs. William A. Jennings, wife of an attorney, of No. 518 Surf street, found $1,000 worth of her silverware. She said that Mrs. Heil had answered her advertisement for a maid, presenting references as Mary Dynak. Two hours after the girl was engaged she had gone and the silver with her. Mr. Jennings said:

"We were struck by Mary's intelligence, or we would never have left her alone in the house on such short acquaintance."

Mrs. C. Lynton Morgan of No. 2910 Pine Grove avenue, identified a diamond ring valued at $600, a fur coat worth $1,000 and other articles of value, but she would not blame Mrs. Heil, merely saying:

"She just came to us as a maid; that is all to be said."

The rapidity of Mrs. Heil's method of operation was illustrated again by the experience of Mrs. Louis M. Selig of No. 3933 Pine Grove avenue, who said:

"She called at 11 one morning and was employed by us at once." At 3 o'clock I left her alone in the house. When we returned, the house was nearly emptied and our new maid was gone."

Mrs. Selig identified a bar pin worth $1,500, a ring valued at $150, and the setting of another ring from which a diamond worth $1,000 had been taken.

A REMARKABLE EXPERIENCE

But the experience of Mrs. Miller, the last victim of record, remained the most remarkable. As she recalled the coming of the maid, she said:

"She took everything that she could lay her hands on. Dishes, silverware, ten lamps, a silk dolman. Window display rugs, everything that could be easily lifted. She even took our two canary birds. Hulda certainly was a veritable vacuum cleaner for thoroughness. The only things which she left were those that she could not have had to hire a van to move. She was an expert in the laying on of hands and everything that she laid her hands on disappeared. Jewelry, pictures, clothing—she played no favorites."

Inquiry among neighbors brought out that Mrs. Heil had been so thorough in this job that she had hired an ashman to help her remove the heavier articles and had paid him as she drove away she waved her hand gayly as though to a friend in the window of the unoccupied house.

COLLEGE BOYS CARD-INDEX THE GIRLS; EFFICIENCY KEYNOTE OF LOVE MAKING

Modern Business Methods Aid Present-Day Romeos

GIRLS STUDIED AND FILED FOR REFERENCE

Lonely Swains Shuffle Catalogue of Charms and Choose Their Ideal

By ELEANOR EARLY

Thousands of Boston girls are being card-indexed. Rated for looks, style and intellect. Classified for skill at dancing and entertaining. Booked for their capacity to "love." Listed as "kissing," "non-kissing" and "kissable."

Watch your step, girls!

Among those on file are well-known society girls, prominent debutantes and popular college girls. There are colonel's ladies and Judy O'Gradys. Shop girls and factory girls are rated with millionaire flappers and dashing heiresses.

Men from Harvard, Tech, Tufts and Boston University have catalogued all their girl friends. Listed everything from complexions to inclinations. They've compiled card indexes. And left them on the living room tables. Free and open.

At Yale the names of 700 New Haven girls are listed on the comprehensive files of an international fraternity. Thousands of Greater Boston girls have been rated by our own college men.

ALL STYLES AND CLASSES.

Among them are Vincent Club girls, stenographers, society matrons and high school youngsters. Names, addresses and telephone numbers are listed. Likewise age, religion and complexion, to say nothing of a number of other things.

At the bottom of each card is the name of the man who vouches for the statements recorded. If a frat brother tries a girl—and finds her wanting—her record is called to account.

For instance, if Johnnie Jones from Harvard leaves you—and gets away with it—Johnnie lists you, when he gets back to the files, as "easy."

HAS TO BE EXPERT.

Perhaps he lists you, too, as 100 per cent. beautiful, 100 per cent. style, 90 per cent. dancing, 100 per cent. charm, 80 per cent. intellect (too much intellect, by the way, is worse than none), 100 per cent. figure and 90 per cent. sport. Then all the other boys are going to scheme to meet you. And they're all going to try to kiss you, too. Haven't they Johnnie's word that you're keen on loving? Then if they don't get away with it, they'll jump on Johnnie.

The newest thing in "Girl Indexes" is an art by itself, a thing born of collegiate necessity. They serve a practical purpose.

Suppose a fellow has an evening on his hands. He's been going a bit stale on the "highbrow line," and he feels the need of mental stimulant. So he consults the index. And he finds that little Susan Smith of Brookline has a 100 per cent. intellect. Notations at the foot of the card inform him that Miss Smith is a feminist, an extremist and something of a Red, a "war at the theatrical stuff" and a Phi Beta Kappa. Miss Smith, he decides, could help him brush up a bit. And forthwith he calls her up.

TO FRESHEN THE LINE.

"I'm So-and So," he tells her, "Johnnie Jones's friend. I've heard Johnnie speak of you a lot, and I'm awfully anxious to meet you. Johnnie had promised to take me out tonight, if you'd let him, but he hasn't shown up, and I wonder if you'd let me come out alone?"

Miss Smith, being a Phi Beta Kappa and consequently a bit discreet, hesitates a while. But finally she says "yes."

Little she realizes that she's only serving a purpose—freshening So-and-So's highbrow line!

Or suppose Percy Gadabout has nothing to do. All dressed up and nowhere to go. His own lady loves are beginning to bore him a bit. He remembers having heard Billy Van speak of a certain little lady at Wellesley, a gay young sophomore. So Percy hies him to the index and calls Wellesley 41794. Well say the girl's name is Polly Park.

Undergraduate, Meeting Girl, Knows in Advance Her Favorite Candy

"This is Percy Gadabout. Miss Polly," he tells her. "I'm motoring out to the Mansion Inn for a bite to eat. Billy thought you might like to come, too. No, Billy's not coming—but Billy you see is our mutual friend, and 'phone introductions are the latest thing. Be a good sport and come along."

GETS HIGHER RATING.

And Polly, of course, is a sport for Billy Van would never have vouched for her). So Polly says "yes." And when Percy gets back he crosses out the 39 p. c. that Billy had listed Polly for "loving," and makes it 100 p. c. And he writes underneath "She knows well and thoroughly."

It's a great game—this business of playing the indexes.

There are many symbols which mean little note to the initiated. K. O. for instance, means knock-out or without. W. W. is wild woman, and K. W. keen woman. N. S. G. is not so good. And P. U. is pick up. G. D. is gold digger. There are others hard to decipher, like T. L., F. M., H. N. and M. A. Bar and Con. There are scores of them, and every little letter has a meaning all its own.

Then watch your step, you little girls. For the college boys'll list you if you don't watch out.

SANK HOSPITAL SHIP, FREED

German Officer Obeyed Orders, but Responsibility Is Not Fixed

Leipsic, June 4. (By Associated Press)—Entente officials who expected the German submarine policy in the war to be passed on in its broader aspects by the high court in session here for the trial of persons accused of war crimes were disappointed today when Lieutenant Karl Neumann was exonerated of criminality in the sinking of the hospital ship Dover Castle by the submarine he commanded. He was acquitted after the court held that the only point at issue was whether he carried out his orders.

Proof was brought to the court's satisfaction that he had acted nearly within the instructions given him by his superiors. Whether Emperor William, Admiral von Tirpitz or other German officials who had a hand in inaugurating the ruthless submarine policy were criminally responsible was not touched upon.

As the submarine commanders who sank the Lusitania and hundreds of other Allied ships can probably shield themselves, as Neumann did, behind their orders, Entente quarters say there is apparently slight chance of punishment for them.

Today's trial closed the British cases, so far as they are ready to present them. These cases proved disappointing to most of the Entente observers, whose criticism has been that the cases were poorly selected and badly supported by evidence.

British Troops in Erin Savages, Says Asquith's Daughter

Government Cannot Enforce Law by Criminal Acts, She Declares

LADY BONHAM-CARTER, daughter of former Premier Asquith, who scores England for permitting horrible conditions in Ireland.

By LADY BONHAM-CARTER.

London, May 30.—Ireland today presents, I believe, the most serious internal problem which Great Britain has had to face since the revolt of the American Colonists. It is a political problem and demands a political solution. The present government, like their predecessors nearly 150 years ago, are making the mistake of attempting to solve it by force.

What the result is I shall attempt to show, in part at least, by a few instances of which I was able to get direct evidence during a recent visit to Ireland, in th ebelief that if the English people were to understand what is being done in their name they would instantly disown it and bring it to an end, as unworthy of their traditions and of the ideals for which they have fought.

NO ORDER BY ANARCHY.

I assert that no provocation justifies a government in substituting vengeance for justice, nor can a government enforce law by crime and order by anarchy.

Above all, I believe that England's present methods of government in Ireland are futile: 460 lives, English and Irish, have been lost since the beginning of the year, and each one is an unnecessary sacrifice. England can bring this tragic and disheartening struggle to an end tomorrow if only she will show courage and generosity.

At Kingstown, Ireland, I stepped off the boat into what seemed to be not merely a different country but a different century. Safety and freedom, which we take as much for granted as the sky above us, or the air we breathe, these do not exist in Ireland today. During my fortnight's stay there I learnt something of the—to us—unimaginable horror of the life of a nation from which these things have been withdrawn.

TERRORISM AT WORK.

Fixed bayonets, steel helmets, barbed wire and sandbags, the thunder of armored cars over cobblestones, the stillness of curfew, the handcuffed prisoners marched away under the gaze of sullen, silent crowds, these things made no reality that Ireland is being held today as a hostile country by an army of occupation.

But when I saw the mined villages, when I saw children flying to their homes for safety at the distant rumble of a police lorry, then I understood that other, darker forces had been called in. Outside the army, independent of it, and alien to its whole tradition, terrorism is at work.

"A policeman." To us the word conjures up a dark blue figure, wise, gentle and infinitely patient, policing pickpockets through traffic, carrying fainting women out of crowds, bringing lost dogs and little children home again—a symbol, not so much of law and order as of comfort and safety—"a very pleasant help in trouble."

This is not, however, the picture the word suggests to the mind of an inhabitant of Ireland today, and after spending a very short time there I began to understand why.

Within two days of my arrival I chanced to follow, within an hour or two of its passage, in the wake of a police lorry one of the many hundreds which are scouring Ireland, over eight miles of country road in a quiet country in the west. The lorry was carrying fifteen policemen, and a hostage was strapped to it, said by those who saw him to be the member of Parliament for that district.

They called first at a little village inn, where they consumed, according to the landlady (one of the rare Unionists left in the south of Ireland today), $36 worth of drink, for which they refused to pay.

BEGAN WITH LARCENY.

When she asked for what they owed her the man in command shouted out to the others, "She wants payment, does she? Bring in a tin of petrol; we'll pay with that." And she said no more about it.

They re-embarked after their orgy, and three miles farther along the road they came upon two old road menders and a farmer's son leading a pony and cart. The road menders knowing their habits, got over the wall and ran away. The police fired two shots after them. Seeing their danger, and conscious of doing no harm himself, the boy stood his ground.

Six policemen thereupon got off the lorry and set upon him, battering him brutally about the head and face with fists and sticks. They left him dazed and bleeding by the roadside, and then (the final touch of squalor) they picked up the old roadmender's new overcoat (it was the first time he had worn it), which he had left behind him, with his dinner, and drove off.

At the next village they sacked the draper's shop, stealing a large quantity of shirts and other goods. I saw the poor boy who had been injured. I don't think I have ever felt more ashamed in my life. His face was a purple, swollen jelly, both eyes almost invisible, his nose cut and gashed down one side, and other lesser wounds and scratches about the face and head, his shirt blood-stained, his clothes clotted with dried blood.

He was a gentle, courageous creature, and as I stood there stammering out apologies his one idea seemed to be to put me at my ease. "Don't you bother about it. You can't help it. We understand that."

I was struck by the detachment and aloofness, the absence of bitterness and resentment with which he treated the whole incident. He spoke of it with no more temper or surprise than we should feel at being mauled by a wild beast if we happened to meet one in the way.

The only sign he gave that he recognized the Black-and-Tan as human beings was when he said, rather pathetically, "You would think they hadn't any people belonging to themselves at all," and I couldn't but wonder what their "people" in England would feel if they could see their sons and brothers bullying and robbing a harmless, helpless people on their own countryside.

TRAGIC DESOLATION.

No wonder that in Kerry the fields by the roadside are left unploughed, untilled, unsown. Fear of the passing lorry is such that no one will cultivate them. "And these are the men," as a Galway farmer said to me, "that England is sending over here to civilize us."

I can never forget the tragic desolation of the devastated villages, the blackened cottages in ruins, the bewildered, homeless people, suffering blindly, without reason or redress.

The first I saw had been sacked a few weeks before as a reprisal for the shooting of a policeman. It is extremely unlikely that any one in the village had any part in this crime, as the local R. I. C. were very popular and friendly with the people. He was shot about nine o'clock one night.

The avenging force came from some distance off, and thanks to a breakdown they arrived in the early hours of the morning instead of in the middle of the night; this merciful fact no doubt saved many lives.

"MOST OF THEM DRUNK."

They came 150 strong—ten lorry loads, most of them drunk, yelling and screaming, behaving like demons or men possessed. The creamery, which had meant the livelihood of the little place, the village hall, which was its pride, and a whole street of cottages and shops were burnt to the ground, and it is characteristic of the lack of any sort of discrimination with which these operations are carried out that the street destroyed contained no single Sinn Feiner and was far away from the scene of the ambush. As one of the people said to me, "It was not the Sinn Feiners they wanted, it was the best shops."

The drapery and boot stores, with thousands of dollars' worth of goods, were sacked, looted, and burnt to the ground. The tobacco store and confectioner's next door shared its fate.

Just opposite a poor old widow, who had had no man belonging to her for years, poked hopelessly among the ruins of what once had been her home for some charred relic, some chipped fragment of the treasures that were gone, all that was left to her in the evening of her life. She had been given three minutes to clear out, and as she took a little longer they set fire to the bottom of the stairs before she got down, and she had to escape through flames which burnt her wrists and face.

Another woman, although she begged for time to snatch a garment to wrap round her eighteen-months' old baby, was not allowed it, and she had to carry it out on a bitter Winter morning naked into the street.

Another, who lived alone with an old invalided and crippled mother, struggled to get her downstairs wrapped in a sheet. Three auxiliaries stood by jeering, making no attempt to help her, and when she pleaded for more time to get out in—"We'll see if you can't get out at the end of the rifle."

A young man, the village baker, stood behind his door with his baby in his arms while the sheets were fired through both windows to right and left of him.

He saw another man savagely beaten and a rifle was pushed against his own chest, but he was saved by his baby and the intervention of a local policeman.

A little girl of three in a blue pinafore played among the ruins of her home. She was one of seven, so her father told me, whom he had flung out of the window of their burning house to his wife below. "They will never get this out of their minds while they live."

I asked one man if he had made any attempt to put out the flames. "Put them out? Why any one who tried to put them out would have been shot at once. There was a machine-gun here playing down the village street. We are all thankful to be alive."

All spoke gratefully of the local police, who did their best at some risk to themselves to protect the people.

But what could they do against 150? An eye-witness said to me: "It was like hell let loose."

WORTHY OF SAVAGES.

The conduct of the auxiliaries in this village was only worthy of the savages of Central Africa. Not that I blame these men. They have been sent over here to do this work. They are the well-paid servants of a bad government.

"What will you do now?" we asked the head of a big store who a few weeks ago had been a rich man and now had not got a thing in the world left to call his own. "Start building a shed tomorrow and begin again; I can't be idle."

Ruined, homeless, without a roof over their heads or a garment to wear but what they stood up in, their occupation gone, their life work shattered, we heard no word of reproach from these people, no appeal for help, no begging."

Nor, strange to say, did we hear one word of bitterness or anger against the country whose agents had brought this ruin upon them. Only from one: "Do what you can for us in England"; and from another: "Surely the people of England can't wish these things to go on?"

And this is the question I ask myself day by day.

HARVARD '01 IN 20TH REUNION

President and Entire Cabinet Send Good Wishes to Graduates

The class of 1901, Harvard, is making big plans for its twentieth reunion, to be held the week of June 16. Seven hundred men graduated from Harvard back in 1901, and it is expected that the major portion of the number will be back for the "doings" planned this year.

They are convening with the expressed good wishes of President Harding and his entire cabinet. The President wrote Mr. Carroll Swan of Boston, an officer of the class in charge of reunion plans:

"I am very glad, indeed, to comply with your request for a little greeting to the men of 1901 Harvard Class on the occasion of their Twentieth Commencement Anniversary. I think there has never been a time when the entire Nation so highly appreciated the need of that broad culture and deep patriotism which has inspired the college men to unselfish usefulness in their country's cause during the recent critical years of our history. You men of Harvard have many reasons to be especially proud of the record of your colleagues and compatriots and I am glad to take this occasion to acknowledge the great obligation which runs from the Nation at large to the college men who have done so much for us in this epoch."

Vice-President Coolidge and Secretary of War John M. Weeks sent warm greetings, tinged with pride in Massachusetts' men and institutions, particularly Harvard College.

The program of the reunion includes the class "mobilization" at the Hotel Lenox at 10:30 a. m. of Monday the 20th; lunch at James Lawrence's, Milton; class dinner at 7:30, at Plymouth. Tuesday will be an all-day festival at Plymouth, with tennis, baseball and so forth, a big clam bake and other entertainment; Wednesday the participants will motor back to Boston and in the afternoon attend the Harvard-Yale ball game, with supper and a vaudeville show afterwards; Thursday afternoon will come the alumni exercises with dinner later at Marblehead.

And Friday the festivities will take the class on a gala trip to New Haven to attend the Harvard-Yale boat race.

America's Ideals and Europe's Pitfalls

By GEORGE W. HINMAN

The English newspapers received in the last ten days comment at length on the arrival of the new American Ambassador in England. The warmth of his tone in addressing his first English audiences and his assertion of a close sentimental relationship between the United States and the British Empire have brought forth a flattering response from the English press.

No less was to be expected. When an ambassador pledges his country publicly to stand "shoulder to shoulder, arm in arm" with the country to which he is accredited, when he assumes publicly for his people a "moral obligation" to help, as opportunity offers, the people to whom he is sent—does this voluntarily, spontaneously, without consideration or favor in return—he truly has earned all the applause that may greet his utterances.

Such sweeping adhesion of one nation to the cause of another is unknown among the European peoples. Such offers on the part of one government to help another without promise of reciprocal assistance are not thinkable in the relations of European powers.

It is a peculiar situation—difficult to handle, difficult to explain. The Wilson administration seems still to cast its shadow. The legend that the United States cannot justify its own existence, except as it offers itself on the altar of other nations, still confuses public thought.

The teaching of the propagandist was that the United States was a noble nation in proportion only as it served its neighbor more ardently than it served itself. That teaching is still widespread and effective. It has led this nation into errors that can be corrected only at great cost, even to the third and fourth generation. From the beginning of the Peace Conference, it has given rise to the gravest political mistakes. And these mistakes, like all mistakes in foreign policy, cannot be repaired. They must be paid for.

The facts are plain. In the case of England they are especially plain. But, in view of the American Ambassador's renewed proffers of fealty, they may be stated again.

The United States enabled England to win the war. The United States, entering the war for its own purposes, rescued England and the other allies from defeat and the penalties of defeat. But for the United States, England today would be paying war indemnities, not collecting them. England had her back to the wall; her commander in the field published the fact to the world; English and French commissioners appealed for aid to the United States. "Come quickly, or we perish"; that was their cry.

The United States went quickly. The United States did not win the war, but without the United States the war would have been lost. That modest statement is beyond denial. The United States, therefore, went into the Peace Conference as a victor. The United States came out of the Peace Conference sheared like a sheep.

The diplomatic assets of generations were taken away, and liabilities were substituted for them. This country was stripped of power and prestige in the Pacific Ocean and the Orient. Its possessions were endangered by concessions to the only power that covets them. Its principal naval station was imperilled by grants to the one nation that threatens it. Its trade with the Orient was made subject, as far as possible, to the good will of the one people who aim to destroy it.

Who meted out these penalties of defeat to this victorious nation? Chiefly, England. Who signed the agreements that were thus to frustrate half a century of American statesmanship and expansion toward the Orient? Chiefly, England.

England did it, and England was secretly contracted to do it—secretly contracted when Field Marshal Haig was standing "with his back to the wall," when England's commissioners were calling upon the United States to save her, lest she perish, when Mr. Balfour in Washington was assuring the United States Government that no such agreements would be permitted without America's knowledge.

So much for the relations of the United States and England at a time of stress when, if ever, sentiment would have a part in international relations. Did it have it? It did not. Was there gratitude? Not a trace! Was there good faith? Not a shred!

These things should be told because they are true. But they should be heard without resentment or reproach. They should be realized and taken to heart, without passion. For passion is a bad counsellor and resentment a poor guide in international politics. The lesson here to be learned should be learned in cold blood. What is it?

NO GOVERNMENT IN EUROPE RECOGNIZES THE EXISTENCE OF GRATITUDE, AFFECTION, DEVOTION, LOYALTY IN INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS. THE IDEAL RELATIONSHIPS OF FRIENDSHIP AND KINSHIP DO NOT EXIST AMONG THE EUROPEAN POWERS, NEVER HAVE EXISTED AMONG THEM, AND ARE ABSOLUTELY UNTHINKABLE AMONG THEM IN THEIR DEALINGS WITH ONE ANOTHER AND WITH US OR OUR KIND. EVERY INTELLIGENT MAN IN EUROPE'S PUBLIC LIFE KNOWS THIS AND ACTS ON IT. HE WHO DENIES IT IS A MAN TO BE SHUNNED. HE IS FALSE, AND FALSE FOR A PURPOSE. HE IS SELF-CONDEMNED BY HIS OWN UTTERANCES.

Only in America does the legend persist that international politics is romance or melodrama. Only in America do educated men still imagine hero nations and villain nations playing their sentimental parts. The legend is not popular—7,000,000 majority repudiated it at the last election. But it still lives in some places of power and is a peril to the nation. The speeches of the American Ambassador to England are evidence of its life; the flowery responses of the English press are evidence of its peril.

After the experience of the United States in the Peace Conference, a calm, dispassionate and cautious statesmanship, devoted to American interests, and American interests only, is demanded as never before. The policy of offering America's patrimony on a foreign altar has been weighed and condemned. The keenest peril of the United States today is the direct consequence of this fatuous policy. It stares us in the face every morning. Does anyone doubt it? The proof is written across the firmament in giant characters; one has need only of eyes to see.

At almost the same time with the American Ambassador's reception there was another noteworthy function in England. It was a banquet to the Japanese Crown Prince; and at this banquet the King of Great Britain addressed to the guest of the evening these words: "To the people of this country your visit is a symbol of the friendship which has for long united our two island empires, so analogous in geographical position, in political traditions and in national ideals."

There is the picture—analogous in geographical position, political traditions, and national ideals—England in the Atlantic and Japan in the Pacific. Does the picture suggest anything? And the United States pledged, publicly and unconditionally, to "stand shoulder to shoulder, arm in arm!" Does the pledge suggest anything? And the "moral support" of the United States promised, not for a consideration but as a token of filial affection, to the power which has done to us in the Atlantic what her ally aims to do to us in the Pacific! Does the promise suggest anything?

This is no arraignment of the English statesmen for what they have done to the United States in the last few years. Such an arraignment would be unjust. The English statesmen have done only what the statesmen of other European powers would do, did they serve as far as in them lay, and will continue to do, whenever and wherever opportunity offers.

It is inevitable that what we offer to them, they will take; what we give to them, they will accept; that what we get from them, we shall pay for; what they deliver to us, will be delivered only for value exactly calculated and duly received.

An American administration might bestow, as a free gift, the whole military, naval and financial power of the United States on the London or Paris or Rome or Berlin government for a period of years; at the end of that period not a foreign soldier, a foreign ship or a foreign dollar would be given to us in return except as it had been stipulated, for adequate compensation, in a previous contract or treaty. Europe thinks in no other terms. Why deceive ourselves? It is a peril to delude the American people. It is a peril to let Europe think they are deluded.

The proof? America's foreign relations, from the Balfour mission to the armistice, from the armistice to the Peace Conference, from the Peace Conference to the correspondence on Yap, from the correspondence on Yap to the renewal of the Anglo-Japanese alliance which is still to come. Is not that enough? Must the temple fall before we wake up?

What then is the lesson? A very old one. The United States owes only justice to all men and nations. Let it exact justice from all, and it will be safe; let it do justice to all, and it will be a model to all mankind. To attempt more is fatuous; to persist in attempting more is suicide.

Who commissioned this generation to give away the future of the United States, in whole or part? Or to pledge it to any other nation or to all the nations of mankind? None—neither God nor man, neither the dead nor the living! That is the naked truth, the truth that must be followed to keep us free.

NEW ARTISTS TO SING IN CARMEN

Coming to Boston unheralded, the Fleck company has produced in one week more notable new artists than any other company seen in Boston recently with one exception. To possess a sensational tenor—one that rouses an audience to cheers night after night—a baritone whose artistic work and mellow voice are remarkable, and a dramatic soprano whose power is exceptional is no mean triumph. These three artists, Lindau, Martel and Miss Foerster, would do credit to any organization.

Now comes the announcement by the Flecks that they have a real Carmen in the person of a young mezzo-soprano named Kramer. Miss Foerster and Mr. Martel will also appear in the cast at the Globe this week.

RINGLINGS OFFER BIG ANIMAL ACTS

The six features of Europe's foremost trained animal shows are being presented by the combined Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus which will come to the Huntington avenue show grounds next week. The animals are presented by the European trainers who taught them, and while they are sufficiently numerous to constitute an entire show in themselves, are presented as a part of the circus and in conjunction with the other circus acts.

Three out of the sixteen main tent displays will be given over to these newly imported jungle performers.

TRANS-ATLANTIC RACE TO TEST FUEL

London, June 4—A trans-Atlantic race to test the comparative values of coal and oil as fuel for ocean-going liners began at Southampton today. The Cunard liner Aquitania, an oil burner, and the Cunarder Mauretania, a coal burner, both left Southampton for New York within an hour of each other.

P. O. CLERK HELD IN BIG THEFT

Caffrey, Lawrence Man, Found With Woman in New York Hotel

Barron J. Caffrey, a clerk in the registry division of the Lawrence post office, was arrested in New York yesterday on the charge of stealing $39,000 from the mail. It was the biggest theft in the New England postal district for years and has baffled the authorities for months. The arrest was made in a New York hotel, where Caffrey was entertaining a woman, not his wife. About $16,000 was found on his person.

The woman was questioned, but no reason was found to believe that she was a party to the theft.

Arraigned before United States Commissioner Hayes at the Federal Building in Boston yesterday, Caffrey pleaded not guilty to the offence and was held in $10,000 bail.

The stolen $39,000 was all in a single package, mailed on January 12 by the Bay State National Bank of Lawrence to the First National Bank of Boston. Caffrey was suspected of taking the money and questioned by the postoffice inspectors. He stoutly denied the theft.

Four weeks every "third degree" device known to criminal detection was tried in vain on him to break down his declaration of innocence. Psychologists, with delicate blood pressure recording instruments and approved psychological lines of inquiry were equally unsuccessful.

On May 1 he was not at the post office and did not reappear for two weeks. He then wanted to resign, but was not permitted to do so. On May 23 he disappeared again, later sending in his resignation by letter.

He was traced to Philadelphia, Atlantic City and finally to New York, where he was arrested.

Post Office inspectors said last night that Caffrey went to Atlantic City on his first appearance and that he created something of a sensation as a spender. He put up at the same hotel with Jack Dempsey, before the champion went into training quarters, and spent some time in the company of Dempsey and his Manager, Jack Kearns.

It is alleged that the $10,000 found in Caffrey's possession was all in $20 bills. The stolen bills were all of that denomination, Post Office Inspectors Dalton and Sullivan of Boston declared.

BARONESS FLED FROM ASYLUM

Pretty Ada Von David Writes to Worcester Officials From New York

Baroness Ada Josephine Von David, pretty wife of a German nobleman, who was committed to the Worcester State Hospital for the Insane from Brookline March 21, has escaped from the institution.

She walked off the grounds while she and other "mild" patients were working in a garden.

Officials of the Worcester hospital today received a letter from her in New York, assuring them of her safe arrival and determination not to return. Lawyers say that even if the Baroness can be apprehended it will be some time before Massachusetts can regain custody of her.

Baroness von David, graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music and daughter of a prominent Canadian family, last came into prominence early this year, when she was arrested, charged with uttering forged checks. She made several scenes in connection with her arrest and the preliminary steps for her trial.

When officers served a warrant on her she threatened to throw herself out of a window.

Later she objected to being booked at headquarters and entering the police station, explained she "did not like the people there."

When the case against her was to be called in Municipal Court she gave spectators another thrill by a successful dash for liberty, but was rearrested that night.

WEDDING AUTO SKIDS; 4 HURT

Car Hits Telephone Pole Hurling Out Occupants in Beverly

Beverly, June 4—Miss Dolly Conoon of South Salem was injured and three others of a wedding party severely shaken up when an automobile driven by Henry M. Foster of No. 219 Essex street, Beverly, skidded on Cabot street near Bimore street tonight, crashed into a telegraph pole and hurled out the occupants.

Others in the car were Mrs. Grace Elliott of No. 234 Dodge street, the matron of honor; Mrs. Florence Vanhorn of No. 75 Enon street, and Dwight W. Robinson of No. 8 Putnam street, all of Beverly.

The auto was following that of the bridal couple, Miss Edith H. Robinson and Earl A. Elliott of Beverly, who were on the way to Boston after being married at the bride's home by Rev. R. E. Bayer of the North Beverly Congregational Church.

ESPERANTO MAY BE RAISED TO ENTER RACE

Gloucester, June 4—The resurrected Esperanto may yet compete for the International Fishermen's Trophy.

Predictions that the winner of last year's race would rot in the graveyard of the Atlantic on Sable Island bar were premature. Captain Tom Benham declared here tonight.

Plans are being made to raise the Gloucester contender from where she lies in seven fathoms of water, tow her to Halifax or Canso and refit her, thinking the Esperanto would set a precedent. She is the 181st vessel to sink on the Sable Island bar and none of them has been raised.

ACCUSED OF ATTACK ON SOMERVILLE GIRL

Anthony Famolaro, twenty-four years old, of No. 23 Theodo street, Arlington, was arrested yesterday charged with assault and battery on Evelyn Lyons, of Cedar street, Somerville.

SOUTH BOSTON TO HONOR TWO HEROES

Assisted by the Douglas Associates, the American Legion will dedicate today two squares in memory of South Boston soldiers who died during the World War.

WAR VETERANS STOP SPEECH ON COMMON

Service and former service men yesterday afternoon prevented a speaker on Boston Common from continuing an address which they declared to be derogatory to the United States government.

Only a score of soldiers, sailors and marines in uniform and members of the American Legion in civilian clothes were numbered in the crowd of several hundred that heard the interrupted address. Cooler heads prevented a former service man who was gassed overseas from attacking the speaker. The veteran, overcome with emotion, fainted when his comrades restrained him.

Edward John Center of Lawrenceburg, Indi., a shipfitter first class on the U. S. S. Florida, was one of the service men who took exception to the speaker's remarks. Center said that the orator and several in his audience wore red ribbons in the lapels of their coats.

Miss Scott in Recital

Miss Minnie Scott, daughter of the late Captain Frank N. Scott, well known tenor, song writer and journalist, will present a recital of songs tomorrow evening in Steinert Hall. She will be assisted by Walker Leighton Chamberlain, baritone, and William Ellis Weston, accompanist.

12, HURT IN FALLS, ARE AT HOSPITAL

Yesterday was apparently an unlucky day for Bostonians not sure of foot. Among the injured persons taken to the City Hospital for treatment at least a dozen were hurt as a result of falls.

Among the more serious were the following: Lawrence Sullivan, four years old, of No. 1 Brick street, Mattapan; Owen Lee, forty-five years old, of No. 51 Baldwin street, Charlestown; Dominic Sintonso, forty-one 11 Washburn place, Roxbury.

years old, of No. 59 Williams street, Roxbury; Elizabeth Galvin, seventy-eight years old, of No. 5 Brooks avenue, Roxbury, sustained five fractured ribs and contusions about the head in a fall down a flight of stairs; James Wright, thirty-four years old, of No. 185 Waumbeck avenue, dislocated his shoulder by falling down stairs at No. 135 Crawford street, Roxbury; Thomas Sullivan of No. 297 West Springfield street; Collins Whitely, fifteen years old, of No. 174 Water street, Haverhill, crushed in motor truck accident on Glen road, Roxbury; Louis C. Hariano, eleven years old, of No. 39 Dundee street, Back Bay, and Hans Nelson, eight years old, of No.

JESSIE MEANS BEVERLY BRIDE

Bishop of Arizona Officiates at Boston Couple's Wedding

The marriage of Miss Jessie Keith Means, daughter of Mrs. Arthur Little of Boston and Beverly Farms, to Arthur L. Richmond, son of Arthur J. Richmond of No. 52 Brimmer street, took place yesterday in St. John's Episcopal Church, Beverly Farms.

Right Rev. Julius W. Atwood, Episcopal Bishop of Arizona, and Rev. Nelson St. Carey, rector of St. John's officiated. There was a program of organ music by Wallace Goodrich of Boston and West Manchester.

The bride's attendants were Mrs. A. Nicholas Reggio of Boston, formerly Miss Claire W. Means, the bride's sister; Mrs. Robert W. Means of Boston and four bridesmaids: the Misses Dorothy L. Wells of Boston, Susannah Wood, Ipswich; Elizabeth R. Cawell, Beverly Farms, and Ellen G. Atwood, Phoenix, Ariz. Francis F. Harrew of Worcester was best man.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richmond will live at No. 52 Brimmer street.

Pinkham—Morey

Miss Katherine A. Morey of Brookline and Herbert N. Pinkham, Jr., of Boston and New York, were married yesterday at the Summer home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Walter G. Morey, in East Gloucester. Their Winter home is at No. 230 Buckminster road, Brookline.

The bridegroom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert N. Pinkham of Portland, Me. There were no bridal attendants. The bride has been associated with the National Woman's Party and is State chairman of the Massachusetts branch.

Dabney—Fay

The marriage of Miss Mary Fay and George Bigelow Dabney, both of Beacon street, took place yesterday at Emmanuel Church. Very Rev. E. S. Rousmaniere, dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, and Rev. Dr. Percy Kammerer of Emmanuel Church officiated.

Dr. William J. Mister of Boston was best man, the bride being unattended. She is the daughter of Mrs. Henry Howard Fay of No. 419 Beacon street, where a reception to intimate friends was given after the ceremony.

Sohier—Denegre

The marriage of Miss Elaine Denegre, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter D. Denegre of New Orleans and Manchester-by-the-Sea, to William D. Sohier, Jr., took place yesterday in the vestry of St. Paul's Church, Manchester. Rev. J. W. Mullin officiating.

Miss Olivia Ames was the bride's only attendant. The best man was Charles E. Cotting of Boston.

Rich—Bennett

The marriage of Miss Ruth Bennett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Bennett of No. 6 Lombard street, Ashmont, to Sewall W. Rich of New Bedford took place last evening in the Unitarian Church, Richmond street, Dorchester. Rev. Ernest I. Meredith of Watertown performed the ceremony.

The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Pauline T. Bennett, as maid of honor; Mrs. Byron S. Jackson of Belmont, sister of the bridegroom, as matron of honor; the Misses Mildred T. Wheelwright of Brookline and Augusta D. Hight of Ashmont as bridesmaids, and Mary W. Fraser of Dorchester as flower girl. Byron S. Jackson of Belmont was best man.

Cordingley—Stevens

Miss Mary Forsyth Cordingley, daughter of William Robert Cordingley of Chestnut Hill, became the bride yesterday of Samuel D. Stevens, Jr., formerly of North Andover, now of Pears Dale, R. I. Rev. Lucian Rogers performed the ceremony in the Church of the Redeemer. The bride's sister, Miss Jessie L. Cordingley, was maid of honor; Miss Harriet Cordingley bridesmaid, with Miss Caroline Stevens, sister of the bridegroom; Miss Eleanor Bowker of Waltham, Miss Marion Harding of Chesnut Hill, Miss Ruth Lyon of Brookline, and Miss Helen E. Wagar of Chicago. Abbott Stevens, brother of the bridegroom, was best man.

Fisher—Anderson

Miss Clare M. Anderson, daughter of the late Rev. and Mrs. George W. Anderson of Brookline, became the bride yesterday of John R. Fisher of Claremont, N. H. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's parents, No. 219 Fisher avenue, by Rev. Dr. Charles F. Dole.

Richard Walker of Boston was best man. The bride was unattended. Mr. and Mrs. Fisher will make their home in Millinocket.

Bishop—Blake

Earle Averell Bishop, assistant treasurer of the Hood Rubber Company, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Bishop of Watertown, was married at Trinity Church, Melrose, last evening to Miss Madeleine Blake, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William S. Blake of Melrose, by Rev. Hugh Wallace Smith.

The attendants of the bride, former classmates at Wellesley College, were Mrs. Ethel Orr Rogers, a sister; Mrs. Donald Appleton of Andover, Miss Margery Seeley of Lynn, Miss Helen Fernald of Waverly and Lois Hume of Melrose. Clifford Lyall of Melrose was best man. Mr. and Mrs. Bishop will live at Strathcona Hall, Cambridge, after September 1.

IMMIGRANTS TO BE DETAINED

Some seven hundred Italian immigrants will arrive in Boston on Monday who can neither be admitted nor deported under the statutes. They are coming on the Canopic and White Star line agents and immigration service officials were puzzling their heads yesterday for a way out of the muddle.

The difficulty arises out of the new statute, recently signed by President Harding, which restricts the number of Italians that may enter the United States in a given period. The statute was not in force when the Canopic sailed, and the matter of how it was to be administered, even assuming that it was to become law, had not been considered.

There are about 1,000 Italians on the Canopic, and it has been decided that only 200 of them can land at Boston under the law in the month of June. No provision for the new law requires the deportation of these aliens if they measure up as fit to enter the country under the old immigration act.

How to select in a way that will be fair and equitable to all concerned, the 200 who will be permitted to enter, is also a stiff problem for the immigration service officials.

It is probable that the overplus of Italians on the Canopic will be boarded, at the expense of the White Star line, on Deer Island, and passed into the country as time and the law permit.

EXTENDS SCOPE OF MONROEISM

London, June 4 (By Associated Press).—The committee on amendments to the covenant of the League of Nations today adopted an amendment framed from the combined suggestions of Czecho-Slovakia and China, to add to Article 21, subject to approval by the assembly of the League of Nations at the September meeting. The amendment reads:

"Agreements between members of the league tending to define or complete engagements contained in the covenant for the maintenance of or the promotion of international cooperation, may not only be approved by the league, but also promoted and negotiated under its auspices, provided these agreements are not inconsistent with the terms of the covenant. Special conferences of the members of the league concerned may be summoned for this purpose by the council or the assembly."

Article 21 of the Covenant reads: "Nothing in this Covenant shall be deemed to affect the validity of international engagements, such as treaties of arbitration or regional understandings like the Monroe Doctrine for securing the maintenance of peace."

CITY TYPOS WILL GET THEIR WAGES

Boston Typographical Union 13 intends that its forty members employed at the city's printing plant shall get their wages. President S. J. McBride yesterday expressed confidence the city council would approve the municipal budget for the fiscal year on Monday. But we will see that our members receive their wages in any event," he added.

Secretary John O. Battis said the payroll for one week at the city plant would be less than $2,000 and that Local 13 had plenty of funds to meet the expense if necessary.

TO PROTEST AGAINST RAIL WAGE CUT

At Faneuil Hall at 2 o'clock today members of the Big Four Railroad Brotherhoods will protest the recent decision of the Railroad Wage Board. Sentiment of union officials was expressed in a letter issued by P. J. Coyle, grand president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Station Employes, who wrote:

"The employes who received the greater cut are least able to stand it. It is very unfair and disappointing."

FEVER TAKES ONE OF FAMILY, REST ILL

With one child dead of scarlet fever, and the father, mother and two other children seriously ill from the same disease, the entire family of John Mohla, Bennett street, Wakefield, has been removed to the Malden contagious hospital, it was announced yesterday.

The child who died was a five-year-old daughter, who succumbed a week ago.

CIRCUS MAN HURT BY PACTIOUS MULE

A balky mule sent Archie Hart, nineteen years old, to City Hospital last night from the circus grounds on Huntington avenue.

Hart, a member of the Solls-Floto circus, was attempting to ride the mule, which threw him off and then kicked him in the abdomen.

Hospital authorities described his condition as painful but not serious.

JOHN J. AHERN DEAD, AGED 59

Cambridge Parks Commissioner Was Injured Saving Drowning Man

Parks Commissioner John J. Ahern of Cambridge, died last night at his home, No. 35 Blake street, North Cambridge, after a prolonged illness. He was fifty-nine years old.

Mr. Ahern was born in Boston. He was first a cabinetmaker and later represented a New York publishing house in the Maritime Provinces. He had been employed later by one of the large real estate operators of Cambridge.

He was a member of the City Council in 1895 and 1896. He was a noted swimmer, and while at Hampton Beach, N. H., two or three years ago, aided in the rescue of a drowning man receiving injuries from which he never fully recovered.

Mr. Ahern was a member of the Elks, Knights of Columbus, Foresters, Royal Arcanum, A. O. H. and Catholic Union. He leaves three daughters and two sons.

The funeral will be in St. John's Church, North Cambridge, Tuesday morning.

Laurence Minot.

Laurence Minot, millionaire real estate trustee and clubman and director in a score of corporations, including the Old Colony Trust Company, died yesterday at his home, No. 144 Marlborough street.

Mr. Minot, who was ill but a short time, was fifty-six years old and for many years was chairman of the executive committee of the Good Government Association.

Mr. Minot was born in West Roxbury, May 11, 1865, son of William and Katherine Maria (Sedgwick) Minot. He was educated in local schools and the Harvard Law School.

Mr. Minot's official life included services as a member of the Board of Sinking Fund Commissioners, 1897; Board of Estimate and Apportionment, 1898; chairman Municipal Statistics and chairman of the Executive Committee of the Good Government Association from the time of its organization in 1902 to 1916.

He was a yachtsman of note, and was a member of the St. Botolph, Exchange, Puritan, Commercial, Eastern Yacht, of which he was at one time commodore, and the Brookline Country Clubs. He never married.

Lieut. Charles H. Upton

A military funeral will be held in the Church of the Baptist Arlington today for Lieutenant Charles H. Upton, who was killed in France in August, 1918, while in the Air Service. The body will lie in state in the Town Hall until the hour for the funeral, when it will be borne to the church by members of Arlington Post, American Legion.

Lieutenant Upton was a member of the class of 1914 at Tufts and the son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Upton of Whittemore street, Arlington.

Humorist "Luke McLuke"

Cincinnati, June 4.—James S. Hastings, humorist, known throughout the country as "Luke McLuke," died today at the Good Samaritan Hospital. His widow, Mrs. Rose Hastings, and one son survive.

Mr. Hastings was born in Lowell, Mass., fifty-three years ago.

Stanley G. Wellington

Funeral services for the late Stanley Gray Wellington were held yesterday afternoon at his late home on Crafts road, Chestnut Hill. Rev. Lucien W. Rogers of the Church of the Redeemer officiated and there was music by the Apollo quartet. The body was cremated at Forest Hills cemetery.

Mr. Wellington, who was senior partner of the Boston law firm of Wellington, Sears & Co., died suddenly in Atlantic City. He is survived by a widow and five children.

James W. Farrell

Randolph, June 4.—James W. Farrell of the board of fire engineers died here today in his sixty-ninth year. He leaves a widow. His funeral will be held Monday morning. A requiem mass at St. Mary's Church.

Mrs. Ann J. McCullom

Mrs. Ann Judson McCullom, for twenty years a resident of Brookline, died yesterday at No. 39 Hemenway street, Boston, where she had spent the Winter.

Mrs. McCullom was born in Newcastle, Me., September 13, 1834, but grew up in Bath. She married Abel Cordelia McCullom at that city. He died several years ago and Mrs. McCullom came to Brookline to live.

LLOYD GEORGE TO OWN TIMES

Premier's Control of the Northcliffe Paper May Change Irish Policy

By Universal Service

London, June 4.—Premier David Lloyd George, taking advantage of Lord Northcliffe's decision to cut the losses incurred in running a great national newspaper, is obtaining control of the London Times.

This highly important development, which has vastly more international significance than any mere commercial deal, however large, is reported in various weekly publications.

For several weeks the rumor has been current in clubs and newspaper circles that England's premier newspaper was passing into government control, but the principal parties interested naturally prefer to maintain silence.

Today's Outlook boldly states that Lord Northcliffe has grown tired of his expensive try and that Sir John Ellerman, wealthy shipowner, who already holds a block of stock in the Times, is now securing effective control, although nominal control will revert to the Walter family. Declaring that Lloyd George has long wanted to "freeze out" Northcliffe, the Outlook adds:

"The change represents a great personal success for the Premier. Always restive under press criticism, Lloyd George felt particularly aggrieved that in all of his disputes with France that great organ, which is regarded on the continent as the 'voice of England,' should steadily have opposed him."

Under Northcliffe the Times has favored home rule and a policy of conciliation with Ireland, but now it may swing over to back Lloyd George's policy.

SAYS GOMPERS IS AGAINST ERIN

Opposed to Rank and File of A. F. of L. Members, Declares Downing

By UNIVERSAL SERVICE.

Washington, June 4.—Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, has always been counted against the Irish cause, according to Rossa B. Downing of the American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic. The rank and file of the American Federation of Labor has been considered friendly to the aims and struggles of the Irish people, Downing says.

"The federation at its convention in Montreal last year and at Atlantic City the year before endorsed the Irish movement and authorized the officers of the federation to lend a helping hand. Through the influence of Gompers and his powerful political machine, the wishes of the convention have not been fulfilled, at least as far as we have been able to see it.

"The attitude of Mr. Gompers on the Irish question has been watched by friends of the Irish cause in this country and many believe that despite his pro-British machine, the preponderance of members of Irish descent and of Irish sentiment in the organization will either force him to change his mind on the question or they will oust him.

"The people have always shown a pro-British attitude on all questions in this country that had to do with the British Empire, of which I am a citizen. The President has a membership of more than 100,000 throughout the United States, and in Washington it has a membership in excess of 5,000. In the trades and labor councils of the country, which are the foundation of the American Federation of Labor, the organization is very strong and the attitude of Mr. Gompers in defying the mandate of the convention for two years will not be tolerated."

The five councils in Washington will discuss Gompers at their meetings during the week.

Gompers to Fight for His Re-election

By Universal Service

Washington, June 4.—Declaring they were ready for a "fight to a finish" to re-elect Samuel Gompers president, a group of officials of the American Federation of Labor left today for Denver to attend the Federation convention.

The group was headed by Gompers and Frank Morrison, secretary of the federation. Gompers said the main issues were the open shop, recognition of unions and the principle of collective bargaining and the maintenance of wage standards.

Several possible candidates to succeed Gompers have been mentioned. It is thought the choice will fall upon John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America.

R. I. CARPENTERS' WAGE CUT 15 PER CENT.

Providence, R. I., June 4.—Professor Henry B. Gardner, arbitrator of the wage differences between the carpenters' union and the Master Builders' Association, has announced a decision awarding the men a wage of 85 cents an hour, the rate named by the master builders. This is a decrease of 15 cents as the price prior to May 1, when the new rates were put into effect by the masters, was $1 an hour. This sum was given the carpenters during the war.

WEEKS HOPES FOR CANAL AGREEMENT

Washington, June 4. — Secretary Weeks expressed hope today that an agreement soon would be reached between the government and the owners of the Cape Cod Canal, which would end litigation now pending over the purchase of the canal by the government.

"The case is now in the process of negotiation," the secretary said.

A jury in the Federal Court at Boston awarded the Boston, Cape Cod & New York Canal Company $10,801,201 from the government, but the Circuit Court of Appeals vacated the jury decision. The case then was remanded to the lower court for further proceedings.

WON FIGHT ON TUBERCULOSIS

Dramatic Recital at American Medical Association Session

A dramatic scene featured yesterday's session of the American Medical Association in convention at the State House. Dr. P. P. Smith of the United States Public Health Service, urged more expert study of tuberculosis, declaring "many of our doctors cannot diagnose a case, while the average nurse in a hospital is absolutely ignorant about the disease."

Dr. William H. Seamen of New Orleans had disagreed with the speaker, when Dr. E. L. Sanden, in charge of rural sanitation work for the United States Public Health Service, arose to endorse Dr. Smith's statements.

"Twenty years ago," he said, "one of the doctor's co-workers found out he was in the incipient stages of tuberculosis. He went for advice to every physician he thought could help him. Each time he was told he must leave his work and home and make his fight alone in Arizona or Colorado. He called on Dr. Smith for final advice. Dr. Smith told him to stay where he was, to continue his work and follow a course of treatment he prescribed.

"Twenty years have passed by. Once again I want to thank Dr. Smith for his intelligent, kindly care, for the hope he instilled in me, for the life he gave me. The man I refer to, gentlemen, is the speaker before you."

A resolution was passed calling on cities and towns to open tuberculosis hospitals.

Dr. Oscar Dowling declared tuberculosis to be more dangerous than smallpox or leprosy.

Western Congressmen in voting down appropriations for the United States Public Health Service were blamed for poor port facilities and the consequent spread of typhus. A resolution was adopted calling for a committee of five to call on Secretary of the Treasury Mellon in behalf of the public to ask for protection in this matter.

Dr. Eugene R. Kelley, Massachusetts Health Commissioner, told of attempts to improve quarantine facilities at Gallup's Island, pointing out that preventive work was especially necessary in Boston because when the port of New York was jammed Boston was the natural detour. At Gallup's Island, he said, there is a sterilizer which was installed in 1872; the dock is rickety and other facilities inadequate.

NEW MOVE FOR DISARMAMENT

Harding Approves Porter Resolve to Be Introduced in House

Washington, June 4.—A joint resolution "concurring in the declared purpose of the President of the United States to call an international conference to limit armaments," was agreed on today by Republican members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, as a substitute for the Borah disarmament amendment to the naval appropriation bill.

The text was drafted by Chairman Porter after a conference with President Harding and is believed to have met with the President's approval. It will be introduced Monday. While its passage may be somewhat delayed, it is intended to convey to House conferees on the naval bill the attitude of the House on the question of disarmament.

TEXT OF RESOLVE.

The resolution follows:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that the Congress hereby express its full concurrence in the declaration of the President in his address to congress on April 12, 1921, that 'we are ready to cooperate with other nations to approximate disarmament, but merest prudence forbid that we disarm alone,' and further fully concurs in his declared purpose and intention to call an International Conference to consider the limitation of armaments with a view to lessen materially the burden of expenditures and the menace of war; and that for the expenses preliminary to all in connection with the holding of such conference the sum of $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the President, is hereby appropriated."

OPEN FOR NAVAL BILL.

The naval bill, as returned from the Senate, will be called up on Monday under a rule which will give it privileged status and immediate consideration.

Mr. Mondell said the conferees to be named by Speaker Gillett would not be instructed on the Borah amendment, but that the resolution, while still leaving them free to act as they saw fit, could hardly be ignored.

RUSSIAN GOLD FLOWS INTO UNITED STATES

Washington, June 4.—Russian gold is believed to form the basis of the steady influx of the metal into this country, according to a study of the increasing gold imports made by government experts.

The excess of gold imports over exports has reached more than $1,067,000,000, treasury officials estimate, while the holdings in this country are put at $3,250,000,000, two-thirds of the world's supply.

SABOTAGE BAND WRECKS SHIPS

Part of Plot to Discredit Merchant Marine, Says Official

By Universal Service.

Washington, June 4.—Shipping Board officials and private owners of ships flying the American flags have the striking seamen resulted in the exposure. The Shipping Board investigators found that sabotage experts were setting fire to ships, damaging mechanism and opening sea cocks, timing their action to have it appear as the work of disgruntled strikers.

Some inkling of the identity of the "higher-ups" in the plot against American maritime supremacy also has come into the hands of the Shipping Board intelligence service for the use of the Department of Justice in prosecutions. It has been established that the trained sabotage artisans who directed the damaging of the 197 interned German ships, before the United States entered the war, have been employed in the latest move.

"It was through surveillance of the leader of that sabotage gang that we first learned of his being employed by interests desirous of discrediting the American Merchant Marine," said a Shipping Board official today. "Two weeks ago we were warned of this organized sabotage by Winthrop L. Marvin, general manager of the American Steamship Owners' Association.

"Not only have Shipping Board vessels such as the Panhandle State, the Martha Washington and the George Washington been set on fire mysteriously," he continued, "everything conceivable has been done to destroy the public faith in any ship which dares to venture on the seas flying the American flag. In ten cases we have discovered emery stone deposited in vital parts of the machinery."

"Were not these men who so successfully practiced sabotage on the interned German ships all German seamen and mechanics?" the shipping Board official was asked.

"Yes, but they had remained in this country and apparently were for hire by whatever interests could find use of their ability as an instrument against the American merchant marine," was the reply.

SINN FEINER SHOT BY FIRING SQUAD

Limerick, Ire., June 4. (By Associated Press).—Thomas Keane, sentenced to death by a courtmartial on conviction of having been improperly in possession of arms and of having taken part in an attack upon the police of Singland, was shot by a firing squad in the barracks square here today.

He met his fate without a quiver. As the execution was being carried out large crowds outside the barracks offered prayers and sang hymns.

4,000 WATCH DANCERS AT WELLESLEY

Tree Day Exercises Symbolical of China's Escape From Idolatry

TEMPLES GIVE FAIRYLIKE ASPECT

Foreign Attaches and Naval Officers Attracted to Annual Event

Nearly four thousand guests gathered yesterday at Wellesley College for the Tree Day exercises and to watch the gaily-clad dancers on the campus.

Because of the semi-centennial [illegible] Tree Day this year was opened to the public, as [illegible] usually it is only open every [illegible] year. Guests came from every part of the country. There were attaches from Washington and officers from the United States ships in the harbor, whose uniforms added to the brilliance of the occasion.

The floats of Friday night's pageant were anchored in the lake. Chinese temples and [illegible], which formed part of the setting of Tree Day pageant, added to the mystical and fairylike aspect of the campus.

SHOWS CHINA'S ADVANCE.

This year, Tree Day was symbolical of the rise of China, represented by Wellesley's sister college in China, Yenching, from the age of darkness and idolatry to Christianity and independence through education and the work of [illegible].

Although the subject was serious, the story was [illegible] worked out [illegible] dances roused the [illegible] great [illegible].

We [illegible] several students who [illegible] the masters of the [illegible] the dancing [illegible] [illegible].

Miss Helen [illegible] Tree Day exercises president, who had charge of the entire Tree Day exercises, wrote and [illegible] the story, assisted by a committee representing the junior and [illegible] of New [illegible] and Helen Lane '21, of Portland.

The pageant was preceded by the formal entrance of the four classes in light colored dresses and bearing chains of laurel. Then came the address of welcome by the senior president, [illegible] Whittemore of [illegible] N. J.

The pageant in all the brilliance of Chinese color and embroidered robes, was opened by a procession of Chinese women.

THE OLD AND THE NEW.

The group dances representing idolatry, indolence, light, knowledge, superstition and service, splashed the bright green of the campus with [illegible].

There was a [illegible] of the [illegible] were [illegible] be[illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] of old China. There was the fascinating dance of the Idol, the vision-like approach of Christianity, then the vision of Wellesley until "from the very heart of each college sped a [illegible] messenger [illegible] and the [illegible] messenger of Wellesley [illegible] joined hands in joyous, lasting fellowship."

These two little messengers who interpreted the dance of love were Marjorie Walsh '2[illegible] of Moline, Ills., and Madeline [illegible] of Chicago.

Senior Tree Day Mistress, Visions of Wellesley, was Helen E. Miller of Waco, Tex. Her aides were Dorothy Avery, Portland; Mildred Herse, New York; Elizabeth Kibler; Elizabeth [illegible], Spirit of [illegible] '21; Spirit of Darkness, Dorothy Stone '2[illegible]; Bemon [illegible] Alice Shaw Brookline; [illegible] Chicago; Christianity, Eleanor Walden, '21.

DORCHESTER IN GAY BIRTHDAY

Observes 291st Anniversary, With Sports, Music, Ice Cream for Children

Dorchester was bright with flags yesterday, in observance of its 291st birthday. Five thousand ice cream cones were distributed to as many children at the playgrounds.

Mayor Peters and his sons visited Franklin Field in the afternoon where Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and Campfire Girls gave demonstrations of their craft. On the Speedway there was horse racing under the auspices of the Dorchester Gentlemen's Club, assisted by the Old Colony Driving Club.

Baseball and field sports were much in evidence at Franklin Field and there were hot baseball contests at the playgrounds.

In charge of the playgrounds were Coleman Kelley, Francis C. Coyne, James T. Curran, Patrick Brophy, William Kenney, Henry P. Craig, Norman H. Ludlow and James Mooney.

The children of the Daly Industrial Home, Train street, and those at the Consumptive Hospital, Mattapan, were remembered.

There were band concerts in the evening at Franklin Field, Eaton square and Peabody square.

At the Dorchester High School, in the evening, there were exercises under the auspices of the Dorchester Historical Society. President Edwin [illegible] Jr., delivered the address of welcome and Mayor Peters also spoke. The invocation was by Rev. T. J. Mahoney of St. William's Church. An address was made by Rev. Adlebert L. Hudson, of the First Parish Church and a map of old Dorchester was shown by Charles F. Gifford, vice president of the society.

The Dorchester High Glee Club, [illegible] leader, and the Dorchester High orchestra, Harold B[illegible] leader, furnished music.

City Councillor Walter L. Collins addressed the gathering at Franklin Field. Miss Marion Decrow, assisted by Mrs. Ethel Hill Henderson, was in charge of the Girl Scouts, Scoutmaster Bert Harmon in charge of Troop 36 Boy Scouts, and Miss [illegible] of the Camp Fire Girls. Charles S. Lawler was chairman of the general committee in charge of the celebration.

Dere Fokes:—Herbie Hoover is a grate feller but hez jest a leetle slo in some things. He sez prices air a gettin reasonable en fer us ter keep rite on lookin eround until we strike a place where they air fare. Why gudeness me, thet's what I did fifteen year ago. Then I found Raymond's en I aint hed to do no lookin eround since. I guess there must be about a million other fokes who hev diskivered the same thing, fer when I went in the other Monday, there seemed ter be at least thet menny there ahed uv me. Ef he hed sed the way ter bring down the high kost uv livin iz ter go ter Raymond's, hed hev hit it jest rite.

Ain't it a kaution the way sum uv these hear proud stoars luv us fellers tho? Minds me uv ole Lem Abbott, I wanted ter buy a gude hoss en Lem he kum ter see me bout one he hed ter sell. Lem, he wuz a Dekin in the next town and he told me awl about his hoss, told me the only reason he would let me hev him wuz bekause he luved me so en he wanted tew do his brother gude. He dun me gude, gude en plenty too. The hoss didn't hev but three legs he used at awl, en one uv them wuz spavined en ringboned. He wuz blind in his ni eye en he kicked with what feet he hed left, like a feller taking a reduckshun in pay. Lem hed him in a nice barn en he looked gude, awl smoothed up, en I bot him kause Lem sez he luved me so. I aint never bot nuthin since thet wuz fer sail bekause somebuddy luved me, thets the reason I don't go to no proud stoars sales. I like ter buy from fokes thet jest tell me plain like, what they hev gut ter sell, put a price on it en then let me do the rest. Thets why Ime ez enthuseeastik over Raymonds one he had ter sell. Lem, he wuz a Dekin in the next town aney sure do look gude ter me.

Our new minister preached a sermon on hell last Sunday. It wuz so hot it scorched the varnish in the pulpit en Saffie Riggers sez it almost give her sunstroke. He sertenly wuz full uv his subject.

Hopin yew air the same. Ime yern for luv mixed with kommon sense.

NAPOLEON HONEYMOON TYRANT, BRIDE REVEALS

Marie Louise, Wed at 18, Describes Disagreeable Journey With Conqueror

By MARIE LOUISE,
Empress of France—Second wife of Napoleon Bonaparte

It was a week or two hours after the turn of the tide, we entered the lagoon. A tall column the entrance, flying the flag of Venice, showed Mamoseny, the Minister of the Marine and all the other principal officials who conducted us by a circuitous route to a pretty little garden on which we embarked on the Bucintoro, which flows into the Schiedt at a distance of about two and a half miles. After an hour's sail we reached the Schiedt, which is here prodigiously wide. The weather was magnificent.

WOULD NEVER CLIMB AGAIN.

We were assisted by a thousand [illegible] the report of which half deafened us in particular, for since [illegible] I have had a [illegible] and I hear [illegible] but [illegible] ear being [illegible]

as Wedderburg, where we arrived at five o'clock.

HAD NO CHANGE OF CLOTHES

My apartment looked upon the road, which was filled with fine trees. We were entertained by some military music which was charming, and which I would have listened to with pleasure if it had not prevented me from sleeping.

My attendants arrived at last at three o'clock, so that I was able to go to bed, but they did not bring me anything to change, so the Emperor ... to see me until he ... in the same chemise.

I made up my mind to this Highty enough, but the Queen of Westphalia (I not do the same); her women did ... arrive for twenty-four hours after us, so that she made the unfortunate Comtesse de Liverstein wait all night in the antechamber to make tea for her, and when it was brought she scolded her, would not have any and cried from rage.

One must really be an angel in gentleness to support her manners.

ITCHING GONE SKIN ALL WELL— POSLAM DID IT

Oh, man, "what a grand and glorious feeling!" Itching all gone, burning stopped, no more scratching, and that ugly eruption almost gone already. That's what Poslam does. There's nothing like it for skin trouble.

Just what it would mean to YOU to have the wonderful soothing, healing Poslam comfort. Why don't you get it to-day and begin treatment tonight? You can tell by it's very SMELL that it is going to do good. The first TOUCH goes relief, and almost overnight the ugliness begins to disappear.

All druggists have Poslam. Try it to-night. Use it freely. Then if you are not entirely satisfied with the way it clears your skin, return the jar to your druggist and get your money back. Poslam is a pure, dependable, ointment of proven merit. Resinol Soap used with Resinol Ointment and Resinol Pills, is the prescription of many physicians for eczema and other stubborn skin troubles. Resinol Soap keeps skins healthy and complexions clear.

I knew very well what I should have done if I had been Lame du Palais!

I did not awake on the 19th till midday, and the Emperor surprised me agreeably by saying that he would take us at two o'clock to see the ocean.

"OUT OF TEMPER WHOLE DAY."

He gave us rendezvous at the Port de Haag for three o'clock. The Queen of Westphalia kept me waiting more than an hour, which put me into as great a state of impatience as her own. I was really angry in thinking how vexed the Emperor would be with me if I did not arrive, therefore I was out of temper during the whole day. I am in general a good-natured person, perhaps too weak, but when I am in a passion (as that happens very rarely) I am perhaps more wayward than other women.

We arrived at 4 o'clock at the Port de Haag, behind which are the dunes, which are hills of sand of different forms. Nevertheless, we could see the tips of masts, which told us that the sea was not far distant.

As I was impatient at not being able to see it at once we made them, while waiting, give us some cream, which is excellent in this country, and which is preserved in green bottles of a singular composition.

The Emperor wished to show us the ocean directly, but the dunes were impassable at this place, and we were obliged to make another small journey of two hours in carriages to find a place where we could ascend.

At last we found it, and I was much astonished on getting out to find my legs deeply buried in sand. Each step we took was equally as intrepid as ourselves, and we were well repaid by the fine view that was discovered when we reached the top of the hills.

We saw the ocean, which appeared like an immense surface of water bounded only by the horizon; the sun was setting and colored the sea like a rainbow. The sea was very calm, except on part of the shore, where it dashed with violence upon the rocks.

SOAKED BY THE TIDE.

The Emperor called for maps and conversed with the engineers. The Queen of Westphalia and I amused ourselves by picking up the shells with which the seashore was covered. Some were charming. It is said, however, that those of the Mediterranean and of the Indies are infinitely finer. These shells, combined with the unwholesome air, were the cause, thanks to the malice of the King, of my having three attacks of fever.

In the middle of our amusement I saw that the Viceroy and the Duc d'Istrie were watching us in a very peculiar manner and were laughing at us very much. I had no time to ask them the reason before the sea came with great force and wet us to the knees. Fortunately, it returned as quickly as it had come. They explained to me that this was the usual effect of the tide, but these gentlemen might have been gallant enough to apprise us of it.

We gave up our search to go and ask the Emperor for permission to change. The answer was: "Stupid ladies; this bath will do you good," and he made us wait till 8 o'clock. When we got home we dined, and the same military music was performed as on the previous evening.

The eleventh was a shocking day, but it did not prevent the Emperor from going a second time to see Flushing. I remained in bed with a fever. I do not know what has become of my free constitution; it has disappeared entirely. I am sure that it is owing to Messieurs les Médecins, who during the whole journey have done nothing but vex me.

The Emperor, on his return, related to us that he had seen an English frigate which approached within range of the cannon of Flushing, and that he had ordered them to bombard her so hotly that she retired quicker than she had come.

On the morning of the 13th the Emperor held a council. It is not really our fault if we heard everything, for the salon was close to my room and the Emperor shouted terribly loud.

tricus Saturni—that is, according to the calculations of the earth.

BASIS OF RELATIVITY.

Mercury completes her circuit around the sun in eighty-eight days; Neptune in 164 YEARS. Mercury's year is but one-fourth ours. And observers at Mercury and Neptune would regard us from THEIR standard of time, which differs from OUR standard.

You may say, why not take our standard of time as the standard, and measure everything by it? But why should we? Such a selection would be quite arbitrary. It would not be based on anything absolute, but would merely depend upon our velocity around the sun.

What we have just discussed is at the basis of Einstein's theory of RELATIVITY—everything is relative to something else, and there is no such thing as absolute time, or, for that matter, absolute space. These ideas are old enough in metaphysics. Einstein's improvement of them consists not merely in speculating about them, but in giving them mathematical form, and making it possible for astronomers to verify their results.

ROXBURY BAZAAR FOR BABY HYGIENE

A bazaar and dance will be given by the Baby Hygiene Association next Tuesday and Wednesday evening in the Y. M. C. A., No. 110 Seaver street, Roxbury. Miss Davies Designs Snappy Bathing Suit

(Copyright, 1921.)

Marion Davies, star of Cosmopolitan Productions, her design for a clever and inexpensive bathing suit and the pattern from which it can be made.

By MARION DAVIES,
Screen Star of "The Restless Sex," "Buried Treasure," etc. Copyright, 1921.

By the seashore, at a lake, wherever you spend your Summer vacation—and even whether you are not lucky enough to have one coming—Summer is complete without a becoming bathing suit.

And for a becoming bathing suit I mean one that is meant primarily for the water and one that is meant to look pretty at the same time. Don't think for a minute that you need spend a week's salary at an expensive shop for your water costume. If you want one absolutely individual and one which you can look upon without sighing at its cost, try out the pattern of mine. It can be done that I can.

for three or four dollars.

Mine is of green serge satin, trimmed with circles in darker green, made from wash satin. These are simply tacked on with small stitches by hand. The sash, of course, is the same material as the body of the suit. I used only 2½ yards of satin, 36 inches wide. Any color that becomes you is the one to use, for in a bathing suit there is nothing else to depend upon. It stands on its own merits alone.

This pattern is drawn on the 1-in. reduction scale for size 16. There are only two parts, for collar top and the bloomers.

If you have any difficulties in following my design or pattern write me at Cosmopolitan Productions, 127th street, New York city, and I will be glad to be of any assistance to you.

Patricia O'Hearn Is Way Up in the Clouds

Fall River Girl Started Her Stage Career in "Kid" Plays—Longs to Enter Drama

By ELEANOR EARLY

Fall River matrimonial aspirations to commuting of evenings. For Patricia O'Hearn has come to Boston and Patricia is the prize of Fall River. From Durfee High she jumped to vaudeville, from vaudeville to a road company, and from the road to heading Indy of Zip in the movie, some Jumper—Patricia.

"I started in the cellar and I've ended in the clouds," declared the little lady last evening. "When I was youngsters down in Fall River I used to dramatize the stories in our reading books. All the kids from the Elm street section made up the company. I was playwright, producer, star and boss supreme. We gave our shows in all the cellars of the neighborhood, and we charged our long suffering parents a nickle to see us act.

"All through high school I went out for plays and studied elocution. About that time a prize composer ought to be a senior teacher. I had my hands full convincing her that I'd make a perfectly terrible teacher, but that I'd love to act. At graduation time they selected me for class historian, and I was the happiest girl alive. In Fall River you have to go an A in English to be eligible. Then the pupils do the choosing. So it's a sort of test you see for popularity. Nothing could have pleased me more. It actually gave me courage to do the thing of which I'd always dreamed.

"Right after commencement took my diploma under my arm and coaxed mother to take me to New York. Like little Jean Jones of our play I was a 'poor girl with ambitions.' And, like Jean, I stumbled upon amazing luck and great good fortune. First I got booked for vaudeville. Then I danced into the Winter Garden for a little while. After that I went out on the road in the 'Miss Burglar,' playing the part that Fay Bainter made so famous.

"Pretty quick work, Patricia, most of it. She and Lillian Cullen started out from Fall River about the same time. Miss Cullen came to Boston first. "Jean" is in Detroit and ask with Nash Jazz Band. Then she married an aviator. And now she has a brand new baby.

"I gave up the business for good" declared Patricia as she poured tea. "I live at home and I've decided quite definitely that I never get married. I've waited to make up my mind, and I do.

"After a while I want to do dramatic things, and some day I'm going to do tragedy. Youth, though, is the time to sing and dance, and musical comedy is the part for me. I'm perfectly satisfied when I am in the clouds. The Orpheum road company is the little show I ever saw, and I'm crazy about Jean Jones.

Then a delegation from Fall River arrives—and the interview was over.

ANCIENTS OBSERVE BIRTHDAY TOMORROW

The 291d anniversary of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery will be celebrated tomorrow afternoon. A procession in full regalia of five hundred Ancients headed by Captain Charles J. McKenzie will leave the Faneuil Hall armory at 1 P. M. It will proceed to the State House where it will be joined by the most widely known ancient of the Commonwealth, Governor Cox. The proceeding will be received by Mayor Peters at City Hall. The march will terminate at Old South church where services will be conducted by the Rev. R. Perry Bush, D. D., and Rev. Edward A. Horton.

The Copley-Plaza hotel will be the scene of banquet in the evening.

This Skin Peeler All the Rage in Society

There is a growing tendency among woman of culture and fashion to pay more attention to hygienic means of preserving their youthful charm. Use of mercolized wax doubtless has been largely responsible for it. This remarkable substance produces gradually the natural complexion of exceptionally beautiful youth, a complexion of "enduring" attractiveness. The process of "enduring" as offensive skin, the acid actually is peeled off. The wax peels the skin so gradually, in such fine particles, no discomfort is experienced. The fresher, younger skin, wholly immature, is then protected by a veil of the thin, silky white, satiny soft and smooth. It's not a painted-over complexion but a brand new one. That's why mercolized wax has become such a rage among society folk. The wax is put on a quarter-inch coat of it wanted all one night. All druggists have it, one ounce will do.

Another hygienic aid that now runs in favor is one to remove wrinkles, made by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint witch hazel. Used as a wash lotion it acts like magic.

think that the chances of having one are fairly good enough to justify us in making full preparations here for observations, and have notified the American Meteor Society that it is well to be on the lookout.

"Meteor showers are the most uncertain thing in astronomy, as to predictions, and I most positively refuse to predict one, at least in the popular sense of the word. It is just a chance that is from his report on the comet and its company of meteors to the National Academy of Sciences, the following resume is taken:

When meteor showers are detected in space, the positions of the radiants are computed and the elements of the orbits determined. Search is then made for known comets with similar orbits and elements. By such observations by the scattered members of the Meteor Society, meteor showers connected with the Pons-Winnecke Comet have been identified at intervals during the past seven years.

First computations showed that the orbits did not move with a paraboloic velocity. Next efforts proved that the orbits were elliptical, which fixed the connection of the meteor showers with the Pons-Winnecke Comet beyond all question.

The comet was first discovered by Pons in 1818. It was rediscovered again in 1858 by Winnecke, hence its hyphenated name. Afterward it was seen in 1869, '75, '82, '88, 1909 and 1915.

It was never a bright comet and never surpassed the twelfth magnitude in brightness, and was more than a unit's distant from the earth. It belongs to Jupiter's family, with a major axis of 6.51 astronomical units and a period of about 5.89 years.

Since at certain epochs, the comet has passed very near Jupiter, the most massive of planets, the elements of its orbit have been changed in a most marked manner, due to perturbations caused by that body.

From 1858 to 1909 its longitude of perihelion has changed from 172° 12' 27" to 172° 12' 27", according to 0.0 and finally its perihelion distance from 0.0 to 0.89 of an astronomical unit.

The importance was one of greatest importance, because it made possible the intersection of the earth's orbit with those of its meteoric members with a comet.

Thus the element was slowly increasing during the past sixty-two years, almost reaching the value of unity, which means that the nodal point is very near the earth in the latter part of next June.

It passed up at a distance of 25,000,000 miles on June 28, 1909, and will be still nearer on the coming June 28.

About 7,000 observations on the meteor streams of the comet are made annually by the members of the Meteor Society, in America and England. They show that the element of the meteor's orbit depends merely upon the position of the earth in its orbit, and when the agreement of other elements is satisfactory, considerable difference in the node means little.

ANCIENT FIRM OPENS NEW STORE

W. W. Winship, Inc., has just opened a new store at No. 393 Boylston street. The two other shops on Summer and Tremont streets are to be retained. The firm is one of the oldest in the city, tracing its origin to pre-Revolution days.

Zachariah Hicks, who was serving his apprenticeship as a saddler, and who was the son of John Hicks, one of the first patriots to fall, laid the foundation of the business. On the evacuation of Boston by the British, young Hicks opened a shop at 28 Cornhill, now lower Washington street. The laying out of the present Cornhill necessitated his removal to a store at 13 Court street. It was at this Court street location that Henry A. Winship started in business under his own name. Owing to business developments he moved to 16 Tremont street. In 1878, upon the completion of the new building next to the Old Boston Museum, he occupied one of its stores at No. 9 old odd-numbers 13 Tremont street. His store at 16 Tremont street until March of the present year has been one of Boston's old landmarks.

The business is conducted by the four surviving sons of the senior, W. W. Winship, three here in Boston and one at the factory at Utica.

La Touraine TEA

As Good As La Touraine Coffee

"When finally, after hundreds of experiments we succeeded in producing a tea which we thought worthy of the name La Touraine, we put it to an unusual test.

"All the brands of tea on the market were brought in and brewed along with La Touraine Tea. Then we called in a number of nationally famous tea experts, not in the Quinby Company, and asked each one to choose the tea he thought best. Between you and me that La Touraine. That was the one we sure you will use La Touraine Tea permanently if you will just try it once!"

BIG SHIPS WITH BIG GUNS NAVY'S HOPE, SAYS DENBY

Secretary of the Navy Declares Dreadnaughts Backbone of U. S. Power

By HAYDEN TALBOT

(Copyright, 1921, by Hayden Talbot)
Publication Rights in the United Kingdom Reserved

Washington, June 4.—"The most important problem we have to solve is to get our foreign trade established on a pre-war basis, for, if anything happened to stop it almost for even a few months, no man can estimate the extent of ruin it would work in our purely consumer industries. For this reason alone the restoration of Europe in the shortest possible time concerns us almost as vitally as it does Europe."

This is the opinion of Secretary of the Navy Edwin Denby, third of the Cabinet members to answer my question as to the most pressing problem confronting the new Administration.

It was not easy to get him to express himself on this subject, not that he isn't quite the friendliest, most obliging man who ever tried to figure out the hours of appointments into ten hours of each working day, but because he is so full of enthusiasm over his job it is next to impossible to get a single question answered that does not interest him. He is now full of this about the navy.

If anybody is credited with the Harding victory it must be Denby. He must have more of the confidence that the people we are up against. And no one I encountered in Washington has a more optimistic grasp of the situation than Mr. Weeks.

"But in my case the biggest problem I have to contend with I may say is selling the navy to the people of the United States. There is a deep-seated prejudice against the navy, and it is up to me to overcome it. I am not a politician and I am not seeking votes. I am trying to do my duty as I see it, and I am trying to do it in the best way I know how. I am trying to get the people to understand the navy and its needs. I am trying to get them to realize that the navy is their first line of defense, and that it is the only thing that stands between them and the ravages of war. I am trying to get them to realize that the navy is their greatest asset in the matter of preserving peace

Edith Day's Husband Is Haled to Police Court for Protesting

PAT SOMERSET'S WIFE IS GIVEN DIVORCE

Edith, at Climax of Big London Success, Has to Retire

London, June 4.—The secret of the strange love romances and misadventures of Edith Day, the celebrated American musical comedy star, and Margaret Bannerman, the equally celebrated Canadian actress—both beauties—and [illegible] respectively [illegible] bands, is out at last. It has all been told in Divorce Court.

After less than two years of wedded life, Margaret Bannerman has been granted a decree from her husband Pat Somerset, also of the stage.

The divorce action also reveals the case of the mysterious row between Edith Day and her husband last August, which got into Police Court but was quickly hushed up, and [illegible] later sudden and unexplained retirement from the stage [illegible] the cause of [illegible] Somerset-Bannerman [illegible]

The Fable of How the Fool-Killer Backed Out of a Contract

The Fool-Killer came along the Pike Road one Day and stopped to look at a Marriage Blight.

Inside of a Barricade were several Thousand of Men, Women and Children. They were all scattered promiscuously among the trampled Weeds, which were clotted with Watermelon Rinds, Chicken Bones, Straw and torn Paper Bags.

It was a very hot Day. The People could not sit down. They shuffled Wearily and were popeyed with Lassitude and Discouragement.

A stifling Dust enveloped them. Their [illegible] and [illegible] Clothes [illegible] to Absorb the Perspiration as it [illegible] down a Pink Face [illegible] Neck of Dirt and Sweat, which left the Faces of Three [illegible]

FUN AND FICTION FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

DELIGHTFUL GAMES FOR THE HOME CIRCLE

PATCHED PROVERBS

One player goes out of the room or stands behind a screen while the game is played in front of or out of doors. The others seat themselves in a circle and choose a proverb. For beginners familiar proverbs are best, but after a little one can experiment with nearly any proverb. Each player in turn answers a question, which proceeds in one letter at a time and which must form a western proverb.

When the absent player called the patcher in he begins to question the circle. Answer: P-E-A-C-H. Behead and behead and spring festival; again and find Autumn flower. Answer: F-A-S-T-E-R.

Other good chop-words are pirate, band, islander, strain, steam, stone, border, wasp, taunt, stalk, bowl, groom, trace stable, etc. The player finding the best prompted answers becomes the next Mandarin.

PARLOR PANTOMIME.

In similar pantomime materials at hand are used for costumes scenery and properties. The old fairy tale of Cinderella has been a favorite with children, and no doubt many have seen it. Here is a very simple way to present it.

The key word, Glide, may enable the patcher to complete the proverb without additional questioning. If not, he goes on to the next player with "What is another good proverb to which the answer can be given?" They also serve who only stand and wait." If he fails after a set of questions the players the patcher must go out again. When he guesses correctly the player whose answer has given him the clew to the proverb must be the patcher of the next proverb.

CHOP SUEY.

An easy pencil game for a rainy afternoon or evening. Each player should be provided with pencil and paper. The leader, called the Mandarin gives out definitions of words to be chopped, and every player is allowed at least three minutes to find each answer. Here are a few specimens of chop-suey words, together with the answers.

Behead a beverage and find a place for skating again and find a melting fluid. Answer: D-R-I-N-K. Behead a fire and find a breakfast fruit; again, and find a measure of paper. Answer: S-C-R-E-A-M. Behead an African river and find a weapon; again and find a period of time. Answer: N-I-L-E. Behead a country in Europe and find suffering. Answer: S-P-A-I-N. Behead a part and find the Russian form of government; again, and find a furniture wagon; again and find an affirmative. Answer: D-R-A-Y. Behead part of a tree and find a western cowboy. Answer: B-E-A-N-E. Behead a river and find a spring festival; again and find an Autumn flower. Answer: F-A-S-T-E-R.

Other good chop-words are pirate, band, islander, strain, steam, stone, border, wasp, taunt, stalk, bowl, groom, trace stable, etc. The player finding the best prompted answers becomes the next Mandarin.

OH, DEAR ME!

"Well, well! My word! What's the matter she asked on. But a rabbit can't run very long without breath and pretty soon Bunny Rob stopped to get it. Then he looked back and believe me! he hustled right along for home, one ear hanging down like a wilted leaf on his shoulder.

He was hopping up Fern Lane not far from where he stopped to catch his breath when he stopped to pull himself up a bit.

"I won't tell the others," he said. "They'd only make fun of me."

"Thump! Thump! Thump! What's that? Great Peter! Footsteps! Bunny Rob heard through the ferns. Last night he'd been all alone in the woods and going to sleep in front of Hop and whisking like a dead crowing. Today he was with company.

"Oh, my word!" cried Bunny Rob, kicking up both hind legs at once. Then he turned and raced for home. But that baby was a regular fox when it came to tracking down a body. She seemed to know just where poor Bunny Rob huddled just inside his own front door. On came waving that big fat fingers in front of her and talking to herself.

"Oh, my word!

BOSTON LIST CLOSES FIRM

Early Trading Was Dull, With Few Extreme Changes

The Boston market closed firm yesterday. American Telephone at 104¼, with the rights at 5⅛ cents, and Island Creek, Mexican Investment and Swift up from ¼ to 1, were noticeable items.

Trading in the early market was dull, with the customary Saturday morning apathy in evidence. Practically the entire list kept close to the previous closing level, barring only Island Creek Coal common, which sold up a point to 44, another new high for the year.

Extreme price changes here involved Mexican Investment common up 1⅛ to 3⅛ and United Drug common on a two-point recession to 52. The former issue has dispayed considerable buoyancy since the 1920 earnings of over $15 per share became known. Although Drug common has just declared the customary quarterly dividend of 1¼, the stock has been heavy on news of financing.

Tyer Rubber Co. preferred, usually 5 to 15½, on the other hand M. Rubein first preferred strengthened ¼ to 75½, and General Cigar 1st pfd. preferred sold at a dollar rise over the previous level of 69 made almost three months ago.

Public utility and mining stocks held steadily to narrow limits. Total sales of these active were traded in at 1,000 and 93 cents and the stock continued to sell at 104¼. American Tel. & Tel. is current market price and based on the recently inaugurated $9 dividend rate offers the investor the unusually high return of 8⅝ per cent., while many industrial issues of similar or smaller dividends are not as attractive at less than 10 per cent. yield.

Grains Under Pressure

Chicago, June 4.—Grains were under pressure to-day from the start. Prices were lower at the opening, with the first hour then got some support.

Commission interests generally were bearish on the situation and advised their customers to sell on every rally. Trade was rather quiet, with most of the buying coming from shorts who were covering. Prices were easier with wheat 1½c lower to ¼c higher, corn ¼c to ¾c lower, oats unchanged to ¼c lower and provisions 5c to 25c lower.

Primary wheat receipts were 1,000,000 bushels, against 1,000,000 bushels a year ago. Clearances were 1,000,000 bushels, against 1,000,000 bushels a year ago.

TWO MORE IN NINTH.

The Braves also went out in order in the seventh and eighth rounds, but in the ninth got two more when Ford opened with a double down the right field line. Ponseca managed to knock down O'Neil's single and prevent Ford from scoring, then McQuillan then reached to Bohne and Ford was caught dead to rights between third and home but Wingo threw low, Ford scoring and O'Neil took third. Powell went out on strikes after which Barnes hot shot bounced off Dahlen's shins to Ponseca who threw to Kopf for a force out of McQuillan, O'Neil remaining home.

McQuillan's game was not as well pitched as the one he turned in yesterday, but it was just a effec-

Man o'War to Try Speed

New York, June 4. The noted race horse Man o' War, member of Louis Feustel's string, who has been speeding on the track again, leaves Empire City Track this morning for Belmont Park. Trainer Feustel will ship the horse to Belmont Park in the afternoon.

I want to see Man o'War on a distance of ground he will stand for five weeks," said Feustel. "I know he is fast, but I want to see how he can go a mile at Belmont Park. I am in favor of Saratoga.

Larson Keeps Crimson's Hits Scattered Through Prolonged Game

PENN'S TWO RUNS IN 11TH DECISIVE

Both Nines Blunder in Tossing Ball With Men on Bases

By ROBERT E. HARLOW.

Pennsylvania and Harvard played an interesting eleven-inning game on Soldiers Field yesterday, which Pennsylvania won by a batting rally in the eleventh which netted two runs. It was Penn 6, Harvard 4.

The game was a fine pitching duel between Eddie Goode of Harvard and Otto Larson of Penn; Larson had a little the better of the affair, as he was keeping Harvard's few hits well scattered. While Penn's stars batters did not get many safe drives, they made them count.

Goode weakened in the seventh and allowed three Pennsylvania men to shuffle. This broke up the ball game.

Both clubs made a bad blunder in tossing the ball about when men were on bases. In the sixth Lemon sacrificed and three to two hit Harvard for two runs and took the lead. Lemmon walked and Coach Haughton ordered Puff to bat for Lemmon, and Puff sacrificed. Simpson hit a fast one at Murphy's head, who forgot what to do with the ball. He held on to it when Simpson scored and Coach Haughton on the next pitch Murphy started to steal second and Goode, after fooling with the ball, threw to Coach Haughton, who was forced to run Murphy down. Harvard failed to complete his double play, but Haughton thought he was safe at home with plenty to spare.

Harvard had men on third and second with one out in the eleventh, but Goode struck out Lemmon and Puff, two out. Penn's vanquished opponents made their first and only run in the first inning. Harte hit to left for a single. Goode sacrificed and Harte scored on Lemmon's fumble of Puff's grounder.

charge of all his work the day I give him the word.

I flatter myself that I know Dempsey's temperament. I knew when I told him there would be coasting during four days just now he felt about it then and that he did put up some fine workouts in the days before. I knew how he would feel as the days dragged by with no gloves, ring ropes and fighting equipment and I picked up just out of reach. And I knew in the end today when he knows the stars are down and he can train as he will until the final day, when he knocks off training at 1 o'clock I am safely say that he will be in the best of shape of his career.

Carpentier Will Face a Real Champion

I have been asked repeatedly if the champion will respond to the opening gong at Jersey City in the same shape he was in at Toledo. He will not. It is a different Jack Dempsey who will meet Georges Carpentier than the one who faced Jess Willard. The Toledo Dempsey was free from all signs of ring rust. He had gone through a long period of training before he went to Toledo. He knew how soon after knocking Willard out he would have to go back into the ring and he knew that he would have to be in the best of shape. He was in the best of shape. He was in the best of shape. He was

THREE BUILDINGS IN FEDERAL ST. DEAL

Holiday Has Noticeable Effect on Sales of Suburban Properties

Contrary to the realty activities of previous weeks the center of interest reverted to the downtown section where several properties changed hands more than one business property changed into the hands of new owners. Investigation, however, indicates that the real estate activity of the coming weeks before the opening of summer.

The most striking transaction involved three buildings on Devonshire street, Forbes & Co. exchanging their 6-story building at No. 15 and 17 for the 7-story building at No. 14 to which the same street. In exchange the value of the firm's Another important transaction was that of No. 147 to 151 Essex street, which carries an assessment of $800,000. Other important deals were recorded on Summer street, Washington Street, North and High streets, near Dewey Square.

The business coming the first day of the week has a tendency to set on record a number of transactions in the business district. Indications are, however, that the activity will be confined to the downtown section.

'CO-OP' BANKS NEED PUBLICITY

Educate the Public to the Savings Side, Declares Official

The savings side of the co-operative bank, the most vital department of this home financing institution, is the one least understood by the public. Such was the sentiment expressed by co-operative bank officials at a recent meeting of the directors of Suffolk County.

The co-operative bank since it came into being has been the unfailing source of mortgages to which home buyers may look toward with assurance. ATTRACTIVE BERMUDA

Nearness to States Proves a Big Drawing Card to Vacationists

The nearness of the Bermuda Islands to New York—only two days' sail—is a magnificent ocean liner—is always an attractive feature of the trip to vacationists. Many vacationists cannot consider a trip abroad, as the ocean trip a one to and from Europe would consume all of the limited vacation period.

It has therefore proven a genuine delight to such vacationists to know that Bermuda, in the Summer season, offers the happy medium of a limited vacation time and moderate cost. Combining as it does but two days' time in a delightful ocean voyage, the vacationist has a maximum of time to spend in sightseeing in these quaint old territory. The sailing schedule of the palatial steamer on the New York-Bermuda route includes sailing every five days so that it is possible to adjust one's vacation period to meet the frequent sailing dates without loss of valuable recreation days.

In the matter of cost, a Bermuda Summer vacation is also a happy medium, as it is possible to enjoy an eight or nine-day Bermuda trip which includes all expense for the steamer, hotel and sightseeing trips, at a cost which is actually lower than the rate per day charged by many of the first-class hotels at the leading American seashore and mountain resorts.

Contrary to general belief, Bermuda is cool in the Summer period, being far removed from the heat of the tropics and enjoying an average Summer temperature of 79 degrees.

There is novelty and charm in the two-days' voyage, as the trans-Atlantic as much at sea as the trans-Atlantic traveler, except there is infinitely more of interest being in consequence of the large demand of tourists for a trip to Montreal, Quebec and Ste. Anne de Beaupre, the Marsters Tours have arranged to leave Boston June 29th, also every Monday thereafter during July and August, and September for delightful trips to Montreal, Murray Bay, Quebec, Ste. Anne de Beaupre and Niagara Falls.

This is a wonderful opportunity to visit the Ste. Anne de Beaupre famous the world over for its miraculous cures. However the shrine is not the only attraction on these tours, for here also are priceless paintings from scenes of rare merit, and gifts presented by nations by, who members of the party will be introduced to the churches, monasteries and other religious interesting places by church authorities who will take charge of the party at Quebec and arrange for special Mass. This is accomplished at expenses such as transportation, hotel accommodations, etc. special rates.

For particulars and literature of the trip inquire of Colpitts-Beekman Co., 291 Washington street, Boston, Mass.

Exhibited in the islands for the coming Summer season with period indicating that Bermuda will assume an important role as a Summer vacation place, calling the well-known popular resorts in lands as a Winter resort.

The dainty Band-Apron to all who act promptly and yet fail to secure the full assortment of five garments

The assortment we are now offering consists of the five garments shown on the two figures. It does not include the band-apron hanging to the line. (We'll tell you about that in a moment.) The smart house garment on the left is made of figured percale, with belt and deep pockets. Next is a fashionable garment of gingham of standard quality, in a new sash-back style, neatly trimmed with bias folds of contrasting material. The Polly Prim apron on the figure in the centre is of fine black-and-white percale, piped with pink. Next is a morning gown of fine and regular quality gingham in beautiful plaids, daintily trimmed in plain colors to match. Has neat flat-back braid, pearl buttons, and fancy pockets. The dress on the next figure to the right is of dark blue percale, piped with a neat striped material. All up to the high standard of Quaker Maid garments, for the better class of trade. Sign the following coupon, and drop it into the mail-box. The first thousand coupons received from this issue of The Advertiser will each secure this assortment of five Quaker Maid garments by parcel-post, prepaid, NO MONEY DOWN! YOU WILL SEE THIS SHIP

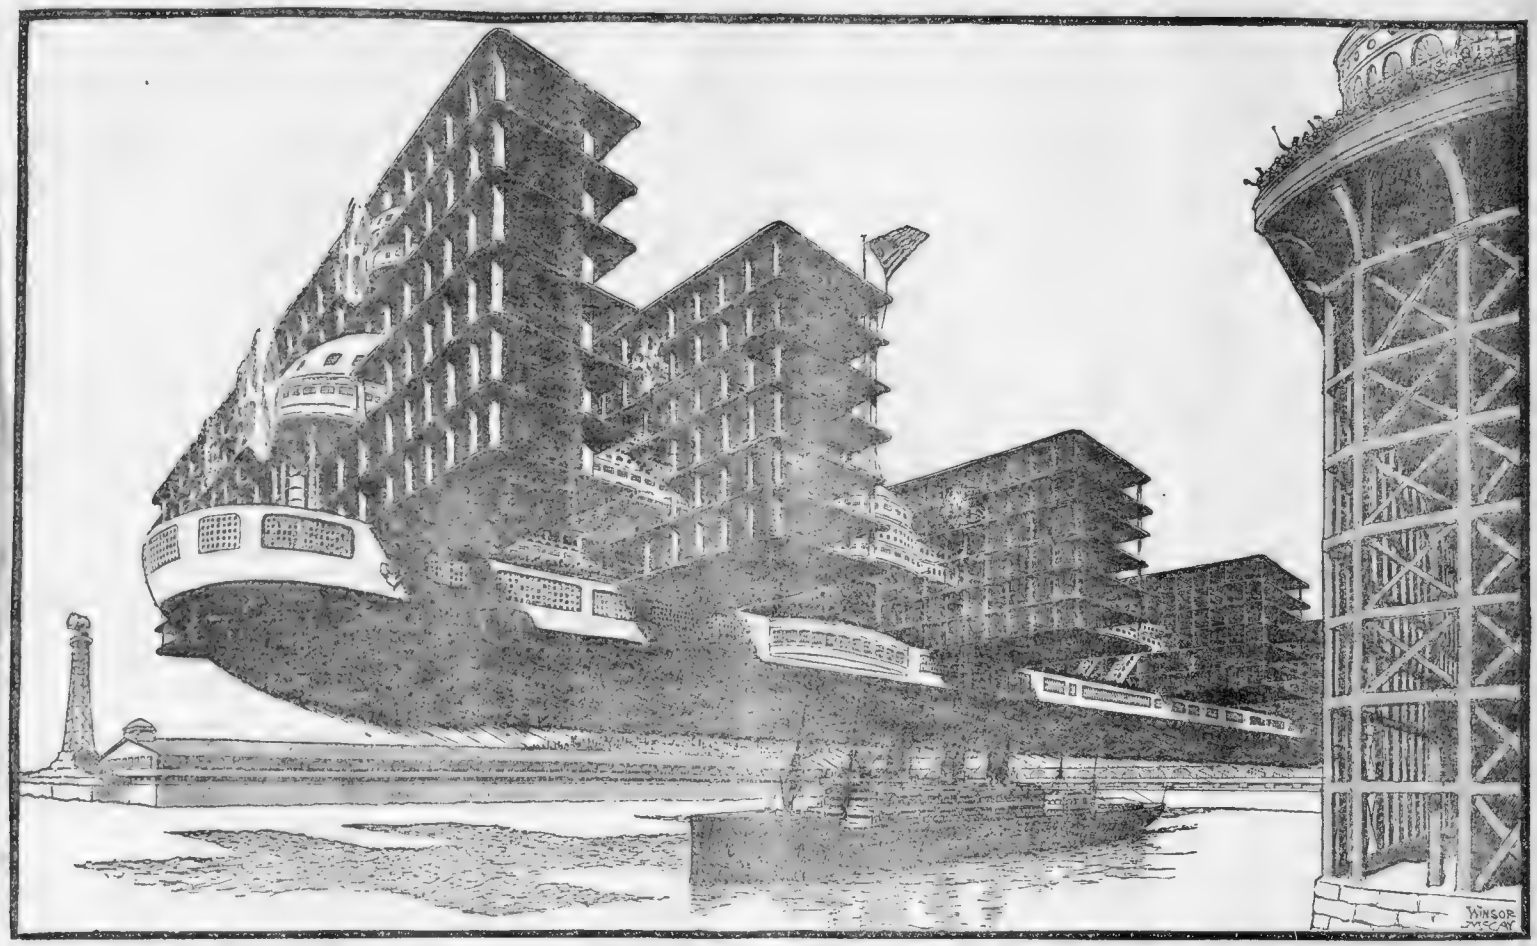
Copyright, 1921, by International Feature Service, Inc. Great Britain Rights Reserved



Hundreds of thousands now living will cross the ocean and go around the world in such flying boats as Mr. McCay shows in this picture. "It hath not yet been shown what we shall be" is a good text to keep in mind as you think about the future and what it will bring.

Early men in their little bark canoes on our rivers and lakes could not possibly have believed that men would ever make such a huge steamship such as you see at the bottom of this picture. We who are used to the gigantic steamship find it hard to believe in future flying ships that could carry a modern steamer as part of their load. Yet such flying ships WILL come. That will be another step in man's conquest of the earth and the air about it. Another step toward REAL civilization.

THREE things are worth while

First—To read about, know and understand the past.

Second—To do good work in the present, making your small contribution to what men have done.

Third—To think and speculate about the future, finding inspiration and excitement in the things that men WILL do.

Avoid and despise the frame of mind which says, "It can't be done." Every step in the history of men is proof that it CAN be done. Anything that the human imagination can conceive CLEARLY, it can do

Napoleon's greatness, as he himself said, consisted largely "in not believing fools that said it was impossible."

You will not waste time if looking at this picture you devote half an hour of your Sunday to thinking, or, better still, talking with your family, about the probable achievements of men in the future.

For when you convince yourself that men can conquer their material problems, you convince yourself also that they can conquer their spiritual and moral problems.

There is no doubt that man, great enough to conquer the law of gravitation, will prove himself in time great enough to conquer POVERTY, INJUSTICE, WAR and MISERY.

The past gives you the key to the future. The man that first fastened a sharp stone at the end of a piece of wood, then shot it through the air from a bow, could not possibly have conceived the great German cannon that fired a ton of steel one hundred miles. Yet, that cannon was made, and what is more remarkable, the determination of human beings, defending their homes, conquered the cannon and its owner.

And that cannon came directly, by various stages in the human brain, from the bow and arrow, the spear and all the primitive weapons.

After Alexander the Great died they invented all sorts of "fables" and so-called "preposterous lies" about him. They represented the great conqueror as flying through the air in a magic machine, and going under the waters of the ocean in another magic machine. These things were imagined and written many centuries ago. Sober-minded men asked "why waste time, ink and thought on ridiculous suggestions that can never be?"

If those "conservative thinkers" came back they would SEE men enlisting for regular service in submarines under the water, and for regular service in flying machines above the clouds. They would see flying machines going in every direction, attracting no attention. They would, without surprise, hear a man starting across the ocean, say that he could save a little time by flying from Paris to London using the REGULAR flying service.

The great flying ship that you see in this picture will come undoubtedly. It may not, probably will not, have the shape that Mr. McCay shows you in his cartoon. His idea is to show what the reality will be in its BIGNESS, rather than the exact form.

When Antony and Cleopatra ran away from the naval battle that sealed their doom, and fled like cowards back to Egypt, they went in a ship that seemed to them the last and final word.

All the men on that ship would be needed to feed the fires in a modern big engine room. And the ship itself could be put on the forward deck of one of our ships.

The biggest ship that we make now might be put away in one corner of the great flying ship that will go around the world in the course of time about as rapidly as the earth turns on its axis, if it seems desirable to have so great a speed—1,000 miles an hour. Ten thousand, perhaps fifty thousand, people will go around the world on one flying boat. As we increase knowledge so shall we increase wealth, and as we increase wealth we shall cut down selfishness.

The day is coming on this earth, strange as it may seem, when ALL human beings will know and see the earth, ALL of it; we shall escape from the present conditions that keep nine hundred and ninety-nine out of a thousand glued to one spot struggling for a living, while the one man in a thousand travels, enjoys himself, sees what all ought to see.

Fools laugh if you say the day is coming when there will be no more poverty, no more anxiety. But fools in England, including the greatest manufacturers of ships, made of wood, laughed when it was suggested that ships might be made of steel. They are practically ALL made of steel now. Our government is willing almost to give away thousands of wooden boats that have no value.

The greatest Greek philosopher—this point you should remember in telling your children—believed that there could be no civilization without human slavery. He said the majority of men must be slaves, and work as such, in order that a few might have leisure to think. We have no more slaves of the old kind, although we still have many slaves to anxiety, poverty and human selfishness.

We have got rid of chattel slavery by inventing machines that do the work, make it possible to pay good wages and still provide enough for all.

Life in the future will be as far above our present industrial system, with its too much for a few and its too little for many, as our industrial system now is above the ancient system of slavery, the owner having power of life and death over the slave.

There are many kinds of force in this world. There is the force of electricity which we use now, a mere toy as we develop it—even the vast electric power of Niagara is as nothing. There is the greater force of the tides which we shall harness one day.

There is the absolutely UNLIMITED power of our gigantic sun which in centuries to come will supply DIRECT the energy that will move flying machines around the world and all the earth's machinery, when men are free, all independent of each other, striving together for more knowledge and better civilization.

There is the power of radium, inconceivable to our minds; there are all the energies at work, capillary attraction, gravity that rules the universe so far as we can see it. But there is a power greater than all of these; that power is a combination of HOPE and IMAGINATION.

What is the greatest change that you could conceive? A savage riding along the Union Pacific Railroad, on his little pony without saddle or bridle, was overwhelmed with amazement when the express train came rushing by him.

The fishermen in their rowboats that put out from the Azores look up in childish awe at the big steel ships that cross the ocean and stop for a moment at their volcanic home

You see an acorn in the hand of a child and you know that in the acorn there contained all that is in the giant oak tree outside the door.

But of all great contrasts none, you may be sure, is as great as will be the contrast between this miserable, poor suffering, worried, fighting, poverty stricken, miscalled "civilization" of ours, and the real civilization which will bless this earth in years to come.

The better day will be hurried forward and helped forward by HOPE and IMAGINATION.

The ship shows you one change that is coming; other changes are coming infinitely more important.

All children are to be educated, fed and protected. Women and men are to be freed from slavery; foolishness and greed will disappear. No man steals water from the Atlantic Ocean; there is enough for all.

Man's imagination will change the earth. Do your share.

National Committeewoman Tells of Plans

MRS. MARY E. SULLIVAN, [illegible] will in the [illegible] River, and [illegible] be about working for her party. But as she [illegible] her brain is busy with this plan and that for advancing party interests, and it was of these that she told a reporter she intended.

"Never since my appointment to the position of national committeewoman, a year ago at the San Francisco convention, has my health permitted me to do the things I wanted to do," she said. "A few more weeks, however, and the doctors tell me my convalescence will be completed, and with the use of my suffering removed I hope to get across the State and meet people.

"My great sorrow is that I could not be present at the meeting of the Democratic committee when Arthur Aiman was elected chairman, but with my convention only two days off, the doctors forbade my attendance, so I have been lying here thinking.

One of Mrs. Sullivan's plans is to change the manner in which campaigning funds are raised. "I want to see every woman who affiliates herself with this party contribute to it. This is the DEMOCRATIC party and I want to see the women's part financed in a democratic way. Instead of a few women giving large sums of money I would like to see every woman contribute a quarter.

"Each community of any size should maintain a headquarters for democratic women voters. The money to maintain such a place—it need not necessarily be large, just a small room with a desk and a secretary—can easily be financed by the women Democrats if they are taxed twenty-five cents a head.

"In working out methods of organization I have taken Fall River as a typical town, for although we have a polyglot population, nevertheless the same problems confront every town, for women here as much as wherever they may live.

"In Fall River there are 35,000 men, 18,000 of whom are voters. Ninety per cent of these, roughly speaking, are said to be Democrats. Why not taken out their citizenship papers.

"On the other hand there are 38,000 women in Fall River (three thousand more than men), and the number only 14,000 are registered voters. It is safe to say that a much larger percentage of women are eligible for registration than that found in the men's lists.

"Nine years ago with very little effort, 13,000 were registered to vote on a local issue. Many of these women have neglected to become affiliated with any party, and all they would have to do is to become identified at the office of the Registrar of Voters.

"Then there are many girls who are arriving at the age of twenty-one who might be added to the voting list by a little effort on the part of women. There is also the group of the women who through indifference or procrastination have put off aligning themselves with any party.

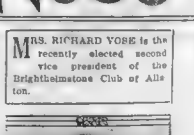
"I want to start a campaign of politics, evangelism. It would be idle to expect that any one organization large local groups of party workers to receive results, a permanent center of interest for those two workers must be established in every large community. Such a school of instruction, financed by each woman in the democratic party, would insure the standardization of methods and would also be a boon to patriotism.

"What the Democratic party needs is organized action in all parts of the state, not only in those spots blessed with leaders who have a genius for organization. It must be the program of the State committee to send good organizers to every town, and then if the State Organization must be criticized let it be constructive.

"Other States are doing such work. At the last meeting of Democratic [illegible] had no [illegible] and the new [illegible] Democratic [illegible] the [illegible] is working and advising me. As soon as my health permits I hope to [illegible]

"I am now ready for the Fall meeting of the [illegible] Committee and [illegible] to be present in Boston and visits to other parts of the State in my official [illegible]

Mrs. [illegible] is one of America's [illegible] to tour through Europe this summer.



MRS. RICHARD YORE is the recently elected second vice president of the Brightheimstone Club of Allston.

Business Women to Have Night at Pops

TUESDAY is the date of the Business Women's Club annual party at the Symphony Hall. A large section of the hall has been reserved for the club's occupancy. Seats and tables may be secured at the clubhouse, No. 144 Bowdoin street, not later than Tuesday noon.

Wednesday evening comes the annual dinner for the retiring and incoming Boards of Management at the clubhouse, when the newly re-elected president, Mrs. Mary Agnes Mahan, presiding.

Thursday evening, June 14, the club will be the guests of Mr. Holloway at the Nantasket Beach Country Club, where they have a supper and a dance. A group will leave the clubhouse directly after dinner.

The Spring business meeting is scheduled for Tuesday, June 21 at 7:30 p.m., when an opportunity will be given to hear the plans of the board of managers for the coming season and to offer suggestions for the betterment of the club.

The spring out-of-door event at Cranberry Cottage, Dover road, Wellesley, which Mrs. Robert Gould Shaw has again personally loaned the club for the purpose, is being planned by a committee with Miss Helen E. Comins in charge of the "stunts." An invitation will be sent out shortly and those who have to suggest should write to the club director will do so. Miss Mabel Bigelow will entertain those who wish to go by train at the Wellesley station. Full details may be obtained at the clubhouse. The club is readily able for short or long periods to members by applying at the club office. Open house will be kept the third Saturday afternoon of each month through October, when coffee or punch will be served and entertainments will preside. Miss Maude Kendrick, the college committee chairman, invites the donation of magazines, games and other articles which members may like to add to the comforts of the house.

Women Co-operate in N. J.

New Jersey women offer an excellent example in their effort made of attack upon the high cost of living. Through the League of Women Voters and the Federated Clubs, they have turned from talk to an agreement with the farmers to buy directly of them all fruits and vegetables which they need to put down for Winter use. They have already listed a million dollar worth of orders with the New Jersey Department of Agriculture. Massachusetts is the New Jersey in being a truck garden State and we believe its women are just as competent.

Mrs. True Worthy White of the Massachusetts League wants to know what Massachusetts woman will take the lead in starting a similar movement here.

Ashby League

A truly representative branch of the Massachusetts League of Women Voters was organized at Ashby last Monday evening. Inviting all women of voting age, an invitation which included women employed in domestic service, the league was launched with the co-operation of women representing every group in the town. After the interesting address given by Mrs. George W. Perkins, clerk of the State League, the Ashby branch was formally organized and these officers elected: Chairman, Mrs. Jessie P. Lyman, vice-chairman, Mrs. Carl E. Foster; clerk, Mrs. Gay H. Joyce; treasurer, Mrs. Walter R. Curtis.

Disarmament Program

Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird has returned from Washington where she has been in conference with the committee of the National League of Women Voters in charge of plans of work to enable women to work for reduction of armaments by international agreement. Massachusetts women deem themselves fortunate to have Mrs. Bird represent them on this committee, which needs exactly the judgment, sanity and vision that Mrs. Bird will bring to it. The committee is headed by Miss Elizabeth Mauser of Lima, Ohio, another local health woman famed for her practical sense.

Lexington Chapter, D. A. R.

Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher Cotton has been re-elected regent of Lexington Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution. Other officials are: Vice-regent, Mrs. Frederick B. Philpot; recording secretary, Dr. Lillian G. Perry; corresponding secretary, Mrs. William C. Cole; treasurer, Mrs. Arabella W. Willard; registrar, Mrs. Irving P. Locke; historian, Mrs. N. H. Griffin, and director, Mrs. Frances L. Blake. Mrs. Sarah Bowman Van Ness has given the chapter a number of memorials which have been accepted by the chapter, and will be known as the "Sarah Bowman Van Ness Fund."

Executive Board Meeting

The first meeting of the new Executive Board of the Massachusetts League of Women Voters is called for Thursday at 10:30 o'clock, the business being to complete the organization for the coming year by electing the chairmen of the various standing committees. Mrs. George R. Fearing, Jr., re-elected president of the organization, will preside and a full meeting is expected.

Field and Garden Club

Frederick L. Emery was re-elected president of the Lexington Field and Garden Club at its annual meeting. Other officers are: Vice-president, R. Leslie Ryder; secretary and treasurer, Robert S. Sturtevant; executive committee, Sheldon A. Robinson, Willard D. Brown, Lester T. Redman and Harry A. Wheeler.

Fellowship of Charities

The Lexington Fellowship of Charities has chosen these officers for the coming year: President, Mrs. S. Randolph Kelley; Vice-Presidents, Miss Hilda M. Tower and George W. Spaulding; secretary, Miss Marguerite G. Nicholas; treasurer, Mrs. Alfred Pierce.

Summer Plans to Be Discussed at Girls' City Club

TODAY the members of the Girls' City Club will be the guests of Miss Marion Nute at a picnic supper and tea in Wellesley Farms. Other Massachusetts League Clubs will be represented. Some of the girls will leave the South Station at 2:15 and others will go by truck from the clubhouse.

A large attendance is expected at the monthly business meeting on Monday, when plans for enlargement, club finances, sources of revenue and the Summer program will be brought up for discussion.

Miss Clara Hockhurst and Miss M. Ward, leaders of the New [illegible] will have charge of a party to be given for their Circle members in the dining room at Chimney Corner on Wednesday at 6:30 p.m.

On Saturday afternoon a group of club members will ride to Lakewood Park, where they have planned to [illegible] the shores of the lake.

A picnic will be [illegible] for next Sunday, when members will [illegible] the clubhouse at 9 o'clock for an all-day outing.

Arlington Heights Club

Mrs. Richard S. Hall was elected president of the Arlington Heights Lady Club at the annual meeting Tuesday afternoon in the home of Mrs. Verne Q. Powell at No. 55 Claremont avenue, Arlington Heights. The other officers are: Mrs. Ward, first vice president; Mrs. J. Herbert Mesick, second president; Mrs. H. Luther Cook, secretary, and Mrs. George H. Hayes, treasurer. Mrs. H. Perce; recording secretary; Mrs. George H. Humphrey, auditor; Mrs. C. F. Stott; chairman of hospitality committee, Mrs. James H. Lawson; chairman of membership committee, Mrs. Herbert A. Snow; chairman of art committee, Mrs. Frank W. Garrett.

A round-robin of the year's work was presented by Mrs. S. B. Buck and Mrs. Herbert A. Snow. Mrs. Harry Currier, Mrs. George H. Lloyd, Mrs. George B. Humphrey, Mrs. C. F. Stott, Mrs. Herman Tuttein, Mrs. R. Patch and Mrs. Edward L. Shinn. Duets on flute and piano were given by Edward Powell and Miss Martha Powell.

Gingham Dress Sale

The Gingham Dress Sale held at the Girls' City Club under the auspices of the Women's Trade Union League, has met with such success that it has been continued through next Monday. The dresses, made many styles, ranges in prices from $8 to $12. Members of the league are acting as saleswomen. The shop is open from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Believing that in the future money must be raised by commercial enterprises, the Women's Trade Union League is to have a corps of salesmanship. Scotch wool sweaters at the league quarters No. 6 Tyler building. The sweaters sell for $3.

These dresses and sweaters are just the thing for Summer wear and should be of interest to those who haven't yet purchased their Summer wardrobe.

The Durant Incorporated

This big women's organization has passed the 8000 mark in its membership campaign, a phenomenal growth from 200 on March 2 to [illegible] on June 1, means that the members are secured [illegible] week. At the [illegible] held at the [illegible] Hotel and Garrison street, Thursday, at 8 o'clock.

In addition to the reports, songs and cheers, there will be an [illegible] entertaining [illegible] "Julius Caesar," by members of the Lesbian Hand Dramatic Club [illegible] given under the direction of Miss Marian Clapp. Dances by Mrs. Josephine Dunlap and Miss Lucia Carlisle will be [illegible] additional attractions, as well as songs by Miss Frances Hall and piano solos by Miss Elsie Luker.

Women's City Club

An interesting fact, brought to light by the Women's City Club annual report which appeared last week, is that out of 4,000 members only 19 took the trouble to attend the annual meeting held in Ford Hall. One cannot help but wonder why there is this lack of interest in the meeting which is supposed to be the most important of the year.

There are 457 women on the waiting list.

Women's Auxiliary Meeting

The monthly meeting of the Women's Auxiliary of the Stanley Hill Post, No. 38, American Legion, will be held in post headquarters, Lexington Bank Building, on Thursday afternoon, with Mrs. Ward Beecher Cotton, chairman, in charge. Following the meeting a social hour, with refreshments, will be enjoyed. This will be the last meeting before the Summer season.

Kensington Park Club

Mrs. Charles H. Hoxie was elected president of the Kensington Park Study Club of Arlington for the coming year. Other officers elected were Vice-president, Mrs. Frank Morse; secretary, Mrs. Edwin Allen; treasurer, Mrs. W. A. Brooks; auditor, Mrs. Arthur Stevens, and director for two years, Mrs. William G. Brooks.

Cathedral Church

The American Medical Association, the national organization of physicians and surgeons, will hold its convention in Boston the week of June 5. The Association desires to begin its convention with a church service, and has turned to the Cathedral Church of St. Paul's. The speaker will be Colonel J. M. Vanaisler, Medical Encampment, U. S. Army, Omaha, Neb., at 7:30 o'clock.

The Woman Observer

THE WOMAN was coming up on the train from Fall River yesterday. Nearly everyone was asleep, although the day was yet young. Across the aisle, a young woman dozed to make herself comfortable. Her hat and coat were on the seat beside her. She spread, a newspaper [illegible] on the floor of the car, then from her aching feet she removed her high-heeled pumps and her [illegible] tired feet, painful and swelling, she [illegible] rested on the paper. Then she, too, slept.

TAXIS in general are not allowed at the Fall River railway station. Passengers walk to the corner, where the drivers have a stand.

"Well I [illegible] you might call a monopoly," [illegible] cautiously responded the driver, "seeing as how only one of us can drive his car up to the station to wait for passengers."

What's this about making THE WORLD safe for democracy? Why not begin at home?

"WOMEN bear adversity better than men. They have more poise and more adaptability. If a man of fifty meets with adversity he is crushed, while a woman usually rises above it, still willing to carry on."

The speaker was a woman who had seen better days, far better days, than fortune had been joyous. She was the petted darling of adoring relatives. Now all is sweet away, loved ones, money, position in the social world, and she is one of the great army who punches a time clock four times a day.

But adversity has not changed her inwardly and she holds her head high although each night in the privacy of her tiny hall bedroom she counts the pennies in her purse. She is meeting changed conditions as she believes every woman should meet them. She has the poise and the adaptability she believes are the attributes of her sex.

OH, the post who expects those ahead of him to hurry up the escalator! If he wants to walk why doesn't he use the stairs? In that way he might use up some of his over-abundance of energy and allow those on the escalator to ride in peace.

A man who has worked it out told The Woman the other day that by walking up the moving escalator FOUR SECONDS are saved!

AS The Woman was waiting for an elevator recently, she heard a man applying for a job.

"I'm an experienced elevator man," he announced. "I've had plenty of good experiences."

HOW many of you who hurry along by the Tremont street burying grounds ever give a thought to the deeds of prowess and adventure that the old inscriptions bear silent testimony to?

Take the monument erected to the memory of the Chevalier de Saint Sauveur in King's Chapel Burying Ground, for instance. It stands close to the church doors which you pass so many times each week. The inscription tells us that the Chevalier was first Chamberlain to the Duc d'Artois, a brother of the King of France. He came over here to fight under General Lafayette and was mortally wounded in September, 1776.

There are graves of gallant French soldiers in America, as there are graves of gallant American soldiers in France.

TO the War many things are attributed, some justly and some unjustly. The vogue among women of wearing snappy tailored suits with lace collars and cuffs and no blouse is one that may justly be attributed to the War.

Why? Because so many women had to wear uniforms and consequently follow the regulations which required them to keep their coats on indoors, that they got the habit, and the suit-whose-coat-doesn't-come-off is the logical outcome. Every well-dressed woman has such a suit. They offset in some measure the girls in sleazy blouses and transparent frocks—the girls who don't know any better.

City Council Under Scrutiny of League Women

THE Boston League of Women Voters is watching with silent interest every move being made at City Hall, according to Mrs. H. Addington Bruce of Cambridge who is one of the most ardent workers on the executive committee of the League of Women Voters. Mrs. Bruce is chairman of the Community Service and is a member of the Ways and Means committee of the Boston League, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the Massachusetts League, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the Cambridge League, and Regional director for Middlesex for the state league.

"Next year is to be such an important one in municipal politics that four months ago we began our work of gathering facts relative to City Hall and its administration," said Mrs. Bruce yesterday. "The League has always worked for good legislation and as a municipal election is a non-partisan affair we feel that it is work the League can enter into.

"Accordingly, for four months a representative of the Boston League was at City Hall every day. No one has attended every council chamber session and has followed the deliberations of the executive committee.

We all know that the City Council needs cleaning up. The League is preparing data to present to the voters in the fall. The powers of Boston's Mayor are very great, in fact they are phenomenal. We are out to work for the best man. There are two great contracts to be awarded by the Mayor elected in the fall, and as they deal directly with the health of women and children, we are interested.

"One is a ten year contract to be awarded for the disposal of garbage and the other is the electric light contract, also a ten-year contract. The mayor has the awarding of these two contracts. We want to see a man in office to make awards so that they may be free from politics.

"Men haven't the leisure to look into public officials, records but we women have. Strength lies in knowing what one is voting for. We are antagonizing the men voters. Instead of a league we want for the best of the men, the finest principles the man, every woman should belong to the League. That is what the League aim is for it is a non-partisan body [illegible] for [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Florence Reed is a Paramount-Artcraft star on the screen, but she has been on the stage for many years. She is the daughter of Mrs. Florence Roberts, who has been one of the leading actresses of the American stage for many years. Miss Reed has appeared in a number of successful plays, but is best known for her work in "Humoresque" and "Nobody Home." She is now appearing in a new picture, "The Other Half," which is the feature at the Majestic this week.

Miss Reed is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music, the famous institution which has been the alma mater of many other well-known stage stars. She made her first appearance on the stage when she was a child of 5 years, and has been on the stage ever since. She has appeared in many of the most successful productions of the past few years, and has been seen in Boston in "Humoresque" and "Nobody Home." Miss Reed is a member of a well-known theatrical family. Her father, Wilton Lackaye, is one of the most famous actors on the American stage, and her mother, Mrs. Florence Roberts, is also well known. Her brother, Wilton Lackaye Jr., is also an actor, and has appeared in a number of productions with his father and mother.

"The Other Half" is a picture of French life, and is said to be a very interesting story. It is the first picture that Miss Reed has made in which she has had the opportunity to show her ability as a comedienne, and she is said to be very clever in the part. The picture is supported by a cast of well-known players, including Jack Sherrill, Ralph Kellard, Ida Darling, Ruth Shepley and Frank Losee.

REALISTIC SCENES IN GRIFFITH FILM

D. W. Griffith, noted producer of photoplays, believes in departing from the beaten path. In "Dream Street," which will be shown at Gordon's Old South Theatre this week, there are scenes strikingly different from those witnessed in the average screen dreams.

In the theatre scene it was necessary to show a cosmopolitan performance, with a radically bohemian attendance. Mr. Griffith did not go to motion picture studios almost empty for the theatre scenes and the like. He sent a scout through the Ziegfeld scoring performance of the first time. The scout found a team of acrobatic pedestrians and chief waiters who had just completed a tour of the world although the cost of engaging this team was enormous, as well as the services of the waiters, it was found so was small in comparison to the scene typical of the London music hall shows.

The London scenes are also remarkable in real

FANS SLND VIOLA TOO MANY CHICKS

Too many chickens threatened trouble for Viola Dana while making "Home Stuff," her new picture which is billed this week at the Modern and Beacon. For the Miss Dana was a regular bird by feathered fowls of every conceivable and color and were installed upon which pretended it was the chicken hazards of work as such as hot box roosting perch and the like.

Miss Dana was cast as the leading part of a little tom girl in "Home Stuff," a Penrod Jones picture by Booth story. In it she was to be courted by many pets and as neighbor's boy with a family of chickens. Miss Dana gives to a realistic picture of domestic strife. The hens of the pearance as women usually

Miss Dana, portrayed the favorites of their home life through the tale with the grand total. Just how many fowls realized the studio no one can say, no one has had time to count.

I have been swamped with offers from all over the country," said Miss Dana, "but I signed the story of this picture because it was different and the only one I have seen for many months. I am going to keep those chickens, maybe I can train them to do tricks."

"Home Stuff" is a tale of rural life that combines many special scenes on one of the best estates in Southern California's leading women.

CAROL DEMPSTER, the Gypsy Fair in Griffith's "Dream Street."

DEMPSEY AND CARPENTIER FILMED

One need not travel to Atlantic City and Long Island to size up the defender and the challenger for the world's heavyweight ring title, as through the enterprise of the management of Gordon's Scollay Square Olympia Theatre both fighters will be shown in action on the screen of that theatre this week. The title of the feature is "The Fight of the Age."

In the comely form Dempsey and Carpentier are shown in a manner that gives the sporting world an opportunity to draw comparisons as to each man's physique and ring prowess.

Dempsey and Carpentier will be shown in street clothes and in ring togs; their comparative measurements will be shown; they will display their styles of boxing in exhibition bouts and the training camps and training methods of each man will be shown.

Not only the two champions but also many other champions of the ring of bygone days will appear in "The Fight of the Age." These other ring stars include Jim Corbett, Jim Jeffries and Tom Gibbons. Tex Rickard, promoter of the big fight, will also appear in the film with Mr. Carpentier, wife of the challenger.

POP CONCERTS STARTED IN 1885

Neither the Common nor the goldendomed State House is more typical of Boston than the Pop Concerts at Symphony Hall, now enjoying their thirty-sixth season. Other cities have tried to emulate the Pops season and again, but they have never succeeded.

In 1885, when the Boston Symphony Orchestra was four years old, the project was started of a just-Winter series of concerts in lighter vein, to suit the taste of the time. They were called the "promenade" concerts, after the idle custom of the time, but the plan soon crystallized them "The pop concerts" of Symphony Hall.

This institution of many Summers is young as well as old, for the musical tastes of 1921 are carefully consulted by Agide Jacchia, the conductor, in making his programs. The Y. W. C. A. and Boston University have taken tomorrow and Friday nights respectively for their own celebrations. All other nights of the week, however, are open to the public. An operatic program will be offered Tuesday night.

The praises for Geo. M. Cohan's Comedians in "The O'Brien Girl" at the Tremont Theatre are so loud and plenty it's apt to make me cheesty. Here is our friend John McCormack who was in town the other day, and in his magnetic Irish brogue spoke thus, "Mary's" corking sister is a Pip." You all know what a Pip is,—a bully show. He meant it too, as he spoke good and hearty in the lobby where everybody could hear it, with a 7½ smile on his good-natured face. Thanks, John, for them kind words.

"How many women, I wonder, have beaten out unsatisfied hearts upon the rock of a man's want of sympathy with any of their spiritual longings, and yet for a time been completely enthralled by him in other ways?

No. 11.--The Duty of Loving

By Elinor Glyn

THE perfect love of man and woman is, as I have already pointed out, a trinity of physical, mental and spiritual inspiration and satisfaction.

How many men, I wonder, have sought in vain for some response to their higher natures from some woman who has enslaved their senses, and who finally have either sunk to her level or ceased to care altogether?

How many women, I wonder, have beaten out unsatisfied hearts upon the rock of a man's want of sympathy with any of their spiritual longings, and yet for a time been completely enthralled by him in other ways?

The more we study the unhappiness of these ill-mated lovers the more clearly we see the importance of choosing for the object of the heart's devotion one who will meet with you the three fold requirements of perfect love

To love someone in whom every side of your nature will find instant and satisfying response is a duty you owe yourself if you are to make the most of your life.

When perfect love comes to you who read these lines keep it, I beg of you, and tend it as a gardener tends his most precious plant.

Do not enfeeble it with caprices, or scorch it with doubts. Let it flood your life with its warmth and kindness, its beautiful compassion.

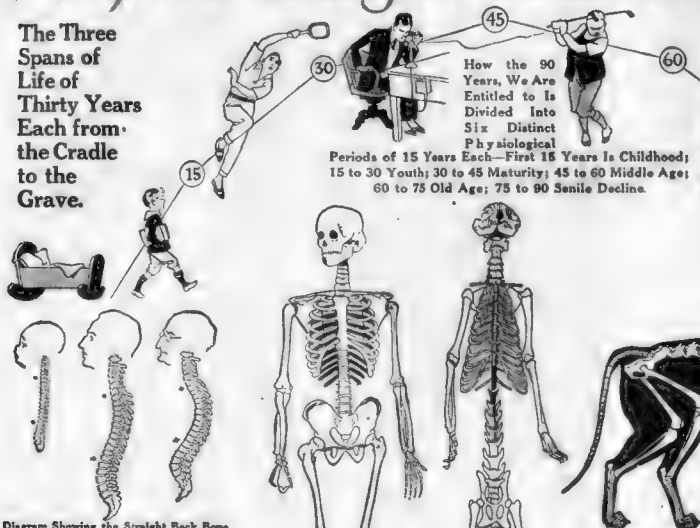
And thank God every day that you have it, for it's the only taste you will get on this earth of Heaven!

What can be more sad than those poor gray lives in which ambition or greed or worldly success has crushed out this fair flower—killed the glorious devotion and sympathy, destroyed the joy and satisfaction which the highest type of love brings!

Next Sunday, ELINOR GLYN, on "THE PENALTY OF JEALOUSY."

Why We Ought to Live to be 90 Years Old

The Three Spans of Life of Thirty Years Each from the Cradle to the Grave.



How the 90 Years, We Are Entitled to Is Divided Into Six Distinct Physiological Periods of 15 Years Each—First 15 Years Is Childhood; 15 to 30 Youth; 30 to 45 Maturity; 45 to 60 Middle Age; 60 to 75 Old Age; 75 to 90 Senile Decline.

Science Makes Discoveries About Us Which Indicate That the Bible's Allotment of "Three-Score-Years-and-Ten" Is Not Enough

Diagram Showing the Straight Back Bone of a Child, the Normal Curves of the Back Bone of Middle Age and the Increasing Curves and Compressed and Hardened Cartilages of the Back Bone of the Aged.

By Dr. I. L. Nascher.

Specialist in Geriatrics (The Science of Old Age), and Author of "Geriatrics: the Diseases of Old Age and Their Treatment."

HOW long ought we live? According to the Bible, "The days of our years are three score years and ten." That is what Moses, the lawgiver, said nearly 3,500 years ago in the only Psalm ascribed to him in the Book of Psalms.

So far as I know, this is the only authority for the general belief that the normal duration of life is seventy years—a belief which is not borne out by either fact or reason. But this assertion does not tally with our experience nor with other statements in the Bible. It does not tally with the great ages of the patriarchs before the flood. With the exception of Enoch, the father of Methuselah, who died at the early age of 365 years, they all lived seven, eight or nine centuries, Methuselah reaching the age of 969 years.

Critics generally reject a literal interpretation of these accounts and make various explanations of their real significance. Some believe that these extreme ages refer to families or clans; others say the years referred to are really months or moons. Some believe the accounts are allegories; others think that they are inventions or grossly exaggerated traditions. But none of these theories explain the gradually lessening ages after Noah.

Noah died at the age of 950; his son Shem reached the age of 600, Shem's son, Arphaxad, was 438, and so the ages were reduced until three generations later Peleg reached the age of 238, and five generations after Peleg Abraham died at the age of 175. Isaac was 180, Jacob was 174. Joseph was 110, Moses was 120, Joshua was 110, David was 70 and Solomon was only 58 at the time of death. In the histories of other early nations there are a few instances of persons who had reached the century mark, and in the census taken by Vespasian in the year 74 nearly two hundred were found between the Appenines and the Po who had reached the age of 100, thirty of whom were 140 years or over.

The Oldest Man and Wife of Modern Times. John Rovin in the 172d, and Sarah, His Wife in the 164th Year of Their Respective Ages. From a Picture Now Belonging to the Right Hon. Sir John Sinclair, Bart., Author of "The Code of Health and Longevity."

In modern times there are many instances of persons who lived more than 100 years, but how long a person can live has never been determined. There are instances on record of ages up to 185, but few of these extreme cases of longevity can be proven, and in almost every case in which an investigation was possible it was found that the reputed age was exaggerated. At the request of the New York American a year ago I went to Greasy Creek, in southeastern Kentucky, to see John Shell, the ancient mountaineer, who was exhibited and exploited as the oldest man on earth, age 123 years. I found that he was less than 100, and this was corroborated by the Census Bureau.

A few years ago Noah Raby died at the Piscataway (N. J.) almshouse at the reputed age of 147 years. The Census Bureau made an investigation into his age and found that he was only between ninety-five and ninety-seven at the time of his death. Even old Thomas Parr, whose reputed age was 152 years, obtained his fame and the interment in Westminster Abbey under false pretenses.

A Hunnarian peasant, Peter Czaran, is said to have been born in 1559 and to have died in 1724, but it is believed that while the year of birth is correct the date of death refers to his son who had the same name. The practice of keeping church registers did not come into vogue until the sixteenth century, and not until a century later was it in general use, and many of these early records are undecipherable or otherwise unreliable. Many of these early reports of longevity have no other basis than family tradition or local belief.

But the ultimate duration of life—that is, the length of time that a human being can live—is of far less importance than the normal duration of life; the length of time that a person ought to live, and the average duration of life, the average length of time that persons do live. The average duration of life can be accurately determined from census reports and health department, and life insurance statistics. This is far below the normal duration of life, but it is constantly increasing as our knowledge of measures to promote health and cure disease increases.

The normal duration of life, the length of time a person should live, does not depend upon the mode of life, environment, health or any other outside factor, but on the make-up of the body itself. As the body and its progressive changes from childhood to old age have been studied thoroughly, it ought to be a simple matter to determine how long it takes for the body to pass through the changes from birth to death from old age. There are, moreover, fixed periods occurring in every individual about the same time of life which ought to help determine how long life should last.

Yet, although these things are known, the question of the normal duration of life has never been decided. The Bible says three score years and ten, but statistics show that out of every 100,000 persons who reach the age of ten nearly 36,000 reach the age of seventy, about 12,300 reach the age of eighty and 1,330 reach the age of ninety. These figures show the fallacy of the Biblical statement. Various formulae have been devised to determine the natural term of life, but most of them are based upon phenomena observed in the lower animals.

Buffon found that several animals lived seven times as long as it took them to gain their complete growth. Applied to man that would make the normal duration of life about 210 years. Flourens found that many animals lived five times as long as it took the head and shaft of long bones to knit together. Long bones, like the thigh bone and arm bone, have a rounded head and a long shaft. Early in life these are joined by a hard piece of gristle which gradually becomes bony. In these two bones the head and shaft become a continuous bony mass about the eighteenth or twentieth year.

According to Flourens's rule this would indicate a normal duration of life of between ninety and one hundred years. But the head and shaft of the shin bone, which is also a long bone, knit about the twenty-fifth year, while the heads and shafts of the bones of the fore arm knit about the fifteenth year. According to this rule the natural term of life might be anywhere between seventy-five and 125 years. Others divide life into four, five, six, seven or eight periods of even or uneven duration.

There is a natural division of life into three periods—development, maturity and decline—and this I have taken as the basis for determining the normal duration of life. If we study the progressive changes of persons who lead quiet, regular lives, free from disturbing influences such as acute shock, disease and other causes that interrupt or hasten the normal changes, we will find a remarkable regularity in the length of these periods. We will find that each of these periods lasts about thirty years, and each is broken about the middle by a so-called critical period. The period of development is broken about the fifteenth year by puberty; the period of maturity is broken about the forty-fifth year; the period of decline is broken about the seventy-fifth year by the senile decline.

The Compression on the Spinal Vertebrae and the Flattening of the Hip Bones Due to the Pressure and the Increasing Curves of the Back Bone in Old Age All Together Result in Shortening a Man's Height to About 3 Inches Less Than Nature Intended If He Had Continued to Walk on All Fours.

Why Man Is 3 Inches Shorter Than Nature Meant Him to Be

The Upright Skeletons of a Man and a Cat Show How Surprisingly Similar They Are to Each Other. Nature Never Intended Man to Walk on His Hind Legs Any More Than the Cat.

The Skeletons of the Cat and the Man on All Fours Show How Nature Planned Their Normal Position.

The Habit of Man to Walk on His Hind Legs with His Spinal Column Erect Brings the Whole Weight of the Upper Part of His Body on His Spine Instead of on His Fore Legs Which Have Become Arms and Hands. This Causes a Compression of the Soft Cartilages Between the Vertebrae of the Spinal Column. Thus the Erect Position of Man Slows Up and Impedes His Growth So That He Has Usually Stopped Growing in Height by the Time He Is Twenty-One, Although His Head, Feet, Arms and Other Bones Continue Growing Until He Is Thirty.

The period of development lasts about thirty years. It is a popular mistake, made even by naturalists, to suppose that the completion of growth marks the completion of development. We stop growing at twenty-one or twenty-two because we stand erect, and in that position we press down upon the spinal column. The vertebrae of the spine are separated from each other by cartilages or gristle of uneven thickness.

As we press down on the spinal column the pressure is greatest where the gristle is thinnest; in front in the neck or vertebrae, behind in the back or dorsal vertebrae, and in front in the small of the back or lumbar vertebrae. The result is that the spinal column, which is almost straight in the infant, is thrown into curves.

About the twenty-first year the increase in growth in length or height is overcome by the increase in the spinal curves, and there is no longer any increase in height. If the body continues to increase in every other direction, and we need a larger hat, a wider suit, larger shoes and gloves at thirty than we did at twenty-one. The average weight of the brain is greatest at thirty, the heart has completed its normal growth about the same time, and it has been proven that the lungs have their greatest capacity about the thirtieth year.

If we were quadrupeds, walking on all four feet, freed from the downward pressure upon the spine, we would continue to grow in length until the thirtieth year, when development is complete, adding several inches to our length. About the middle of the period of development there occurs the critical period which we call puberty. During this period, which may last from a few months to a year or more, the individual passes from the stage of childhood to the stage of youth.

The period of childhood can be subdivided into infancy, lasting until the eruption of the first set of teeth; childhood, from infancy till the first set are shed, about the seventh year, and thereafter boyhood and girlhood till puberty. After puberty and until complete development there is no marked change in the progressive evolution of the individual except the cessation of growth about the twenty-first year, and this has been fixed at the age of majority. This holds good in most civilized countries to-day, but in ancient Rome the age of majority, with the enjoyment of civil rights and the free disposal of themselves and their property, was set at twenty-five. Lacking other terms, we will call the period before puberty childhood and after puberty youth.

The period of maturity lasts, or should last, thirty years. This period has an ascending and a descending stage, the culminating point being the critical period which is well known. This critical period separates early manhood and womanhood from middle age. The female critical period produces profound changes in the woman, not only physically but in her emotions, mentally and temperament as well. This is so well known that no explanation is necessary. But it may surprise readers to hear that there is a similar change in the male, though not so pronounced. In many men it progresses so slowly and with so little disturbance that it is not noticed, or, if noticed, the changes are ascribed to other causes, usually advancing age. The rapid diminution of virility and strength and the temperamental changes in most men between the forty-fifth and fiftieth year are, however, not due to age, but to this critical period.

During this period of maturity there is a condition of stable metabolism—that is, the waste that is constantly going on in the system is fully repaired, but there is no excess of repair material stored up. During the period of development there is an excess of repair material which is used to increase the size of the body. During the period of maturity the body will not take up more repair material from the food than the body requires to repair the waste. It may store some as fat, especially about the critical period, but it will not use any to increase growth.

John D. Rockefeller Who Is Now in His Eighty-second Year and Ought to Live to Be Ninety or More.

About the end of the period of maturity the individual begins to notice that he is failing, that he cannot do as much work as formerly, that he gets out of breath and gets palpitation of the heart, that his eyesight is beginning to fail, his hair falls out or he is getting bald, he is losing ambition and energy, he begins to forget names and he loses interest in hobbies, that he wants to sleep longer and wants to take a nap in the afternoon, and that he is not as spry as he used to be. He tries to deceive himself by finding other causes for his petty ailments, but he knows that he is ageing. If he has led a quiet, regular life these signs of advancing age will appear about the sixtieth year, the beginning of the period of decline.

The period of decline should last about as long as the other periods of life. The reason that so few persons complete this period is because they will not live within the requirements of their age. When the teeth fall out it is nature's signal that the stomach cannot digest food that must be masticated, but old folks who have been accustomed to meat will get new teeth and continue to use meat, which is very indigestible in old age.

Because the skin is less sensitive in old age they do not feel as acutely as formerly cold, draughts, rain and snow, and they neglect the simplest precautions, doing this often in a spirit of bravado, to show that they are still robust. They will occasionally do excessive work, thereby straining the heart. In almost every case where a man dies between the age of sixty and ninety there was some disease caused by the failure to live within the requirements of his age. Often a single neglect of some minor detail will start a disease which will end in death.

About the middle of the period of decline there is a critical period during which the system readjusts itself, organs which have degenerated rapidly now degenerate slowly, while other organs degenerate rapidly. During this period of readjustment the rapidly degenerating organs are much more susceptible to disease, and many die during this period. Those who pass this period, going from the stage of old age and into the stage of senility, go down slowly, become gradually weaker in body and mind, waste and repair proceed more slowly, and gradually reach the point where the vital activity ceases altogether and death from old age ensues. This is the natural completion of life's cycle.

Persons who far exceed the century mark can be looked upon as freaks of nature, in the same class as giants in growth. Some persons will exceed the normal duration of life by a few years, just as some persons will be taller than the average, and these, it will be found, have developed more slowly, reached the critical period of maturity later, and old age set in later. But ordinarily persons ought to complete life's cycle in ninety years.

JAMES COTTON, of Toronto, recently announced the discovery of a special preparation of ether, the well-known anaesthetic, which broke down all reserve and secrecy when administered to the patient. Under the influence of this drug Dr. Cotton said that the patient would babble his innermost thoughts and secrets and always tell the absolute truth.

Acting on this assertion of the Toronto physician a very interesting test was made the other day in Passaic, New Jersey. Miss Nellie Nelson, an attractive nursery governess, who was found wandering about a New Jersey town, hysterical, half delirious and unable or unwilling to give the police any information as to what had happened to her.

The police in despair gave up hope of gaining any evidence of value as the woman writhed in her hysterical convulsions on the hospital cot in St. Mary's Hospital.

"Wait one moment," said Dr. John Corcoran, of the hospital staff. "If you gentlemen of the police will kindly leave the room for a few minutes Dr. Whelan and myself will see if we can do anything to help you."

Without revealing his purpose Dr. Corcoran closed the door on the officers and sent a nurse for the anaesthetic outfit in the operating room. In a few moments the physicians had their patient slightly under the influence of the ether. She became calm and finally lay quite still on the cot.

The physicians asked her a few questions, found that she was entirely conscious and that her hysteria was gone. Opening the door and motioning to the police officers Dr. Corcoran said:

"Now, Officer Coghlan, if you want to ask the patient any questions I think you will have no more difficulty."

With some misgivings the policeman sat at the bedside, and with pencil and notebook Officer Coghlan said:

"Miss Nelson, we are officers of the law and only desire to ask you such questions as will help us to find the men who attacked you. Please tell us where you met them."

Clearly and without hesitation or embarrassment the girl answered:

"It was at Palisades Park."

"At what time, please?"

"It was about half-past seven, as nearly as I could judge."

"Please describe the meeting."

"I was sitting on a bench in the park, watching the people. Two young men came up and sat down beside me."

"Was it light enough for you to see them well?"

"Yes, sir."

"Please describe them to us."

"One was tall," Miss Nelson replied, "and had reddish hair and complexion. He was an officer, I know, because during our conversation he turned back his coat and showed me his badge. He was the older of the men. He looked as though he was about thirty-two or thirty-five years old. The other was a smaller man and younger. He was thin and dark. He looked like an Italian, but he might have been a Jew."

"Go on, please. Tell us what happened."

"They didn't say anything at first and I didn't. I thought they had as much right to the park bench as I had, and I paid no attention to them. I went on watching the crowds. One of the men, the one I shall call Red, said something about the crowd. 'A big turnout,' I think he said. I nodded, but said nothing. The other one, whom I will call Black, called my attention to something funny in the crowd. It was a squabble between a family of foreigners who were tired and impatient to get home. We all laughed. The laugh seemed to be an introduction, as it were.

"So we began talking about the beautiful day and the music and the theatres in New York. Then, foolishly I suppose, I told them the plight in which I found myself. I had come for an outing alone.

"I had intended to come over to the park with my sister, but she had another engagement. And it was such a beautiful evening that I decided to come on alone anyhow. As I started to go the two men arose and said they were going to New York and would be very glad to take me along to the ferry in their car.

"They seemed to be gentlemanly chaps, so I thanked them and got in on the front seat between the man at the wheel and the man on my right.

"I thought we were going down the hill to the ferry, but instead we went farther along the bank of the Hudson. I said, 'This isn't the way to New York.' One of them answered, 'Oh, yes, it is. We will cross by another ferry.'

"We drove quite a long time. I had no watch and no way of knowing the time. Finally they wouldn't answer when I asked where we were going. We came to a lonely place bordered by trees. It was dark and I was frightened. One man said something insulting to me. I told him not to dare to talk in that manner. The other one said something worse and took hold of me. I fought them off and screamed.

"They got angry and scared, too, I suppose, for the one of them that was driving slowed down and the other picked me up and flung me out of the car. The car turned around, and as it did so I noticed its number. The license plate was in front of the car."

Miss Nelson then gave the number of a New Jersey automobile license.

"What do you remember after that?"

"Only that I was frightened and began to cry and scream. Then some policemen found me and brought me to the hospital."

"Why didn't you answer our questions at first?"

"I was ashamed of having been so foolish and I didn't want anyone to know how those men spoke and acted to me."

"Why are you answering now?"

"I don't know. I seem to feel differently about it now."

"Very well, Miss Nelson. That is all we want to know, I believe."

The police now had three important clues to work on. They had a description of two men, an automobile license number and a reasonable explanation of Miss Nelson's unfortunate condition.

Exactly what the police needed to know and which had baffled them because of the condition of their only witness was now made clear. The drug had made it possible for the police to find the clues which, without the aid of the drug, had eluded them. The experiment had worked precisely as Dr. Cotton, of Toronto, predicted it would.

On the strength of this information they made two arrests. Neither of those taken into custody denied the automobile ride, but both did deny they had injured or in any way acted improperly toward the governess. Miss Nelson took the stand and repeated substantially the story that she had told under the influence of ether.

There was no corroborative evidence of her main allegations, and so Judge William J. Barbour dismissed the case against the accused.

Commenting on the experiment, Dr. Corcoran said:

"One whiff of the ether brought about relaxation. When the muscles are relaxed and the nerves in a corresponding condition there is a greater disposition to talk. It resembles that stage of a man's spree at which he becomes communicative. We have all heard of or witnessed the 'talking jag.' Ether affects the respiratory apparatus. The person under the influence of it inhales deeply and thoroughly expels the air. That is the most noticeable physiological reaction to ether. It also affects the spinal cord and the brain. It causes relaxation of the nervous system, a letting down of the nerve tension.

"Its effect upon the person, the influence, so to speak, upon the psychological being is to remove all inhibitions. The girl when she was brought to the hospital was in a highly nervous state. To use a common phrase, her nerves were 'all tied up.' Her teeth were locked. She moaned and wept and shook her head. The officers were about to abandon their efforts when it occurred to Dr. Whelan and myself to try the etherization.

"One breath of ether, less than an ounce of it, and five seconds of time, and the girl was ready to tell what the officers had tried for most an hour to get from her in vain. It seems to me it opens a vast field of possibilities in dealing with criminals or the victims of criminals or in handling unwilling witnesses. Etherization destroys the will to withhold facts, even though they may be derogatory to ourselves or others."

What value will this newly proposed employment of ether have in the future in clearing up mysteries of crime?

Would the puzzling mystery of the Elwell murder in New York a year ago be cleared up if the half-dozen people connected with the case could be examined under the influence of ether?

Would the extraordinary mystery of the murder of "Big Jim" Colosimo, known as the king of Chicago's night life, be explained if pretty Dale Winter, his bride of less than a month, were anaesthetized and questioned?

Colosimo went to his restaurant one afternoon to keep an appointment. But the man who was to meet him failed to appear. A little later, from the darkness of a hallway, some man or woman, whose identity the police have never been able to establish, shot Colosimo dead.

Dale Winter, the cabaret queen whom Colosimo had married three weeks before, is said to be the only person who knows the name of the man who made the appointment that lured her husband to his doom.

Would she, under the influence of ether, reveal that man's name? Or would the anaesthetic, perhaps, force from her lips the name of someone else who for jealousy of her had wanted to put the restaurant proprietor out of the way?

The recent shooting of John H. Reid, a wealthy young manufacturer, in the luxurious New York home of Mrs. Hazel D. Warner, a strikingly beautiful divorcee, is another mystery which supplies interesting possibilities for this surprising new use for ether.

As these lines are written Reid, in spite of his dangerous condition, stoutly refuses to furnish the police with any clue to the man who shot him. And there is no certainty that Mrs. Warner will be any more communicative about the tragedy.

If Mrs. Warner should be put under the influence of ether would she reveal the name of the man who forced his way into her home that morning and riddled her guest with his well aimed bullets?

Would her tongue, under the stimulation of the anaesthetic, disclose enough about recent events in her life to make perfectly clear the motive for this murderous attack on Mr. Reid?

And then could her story be corroborated by comparing it with the statements which Reid, if he recovers, might be made to make while similarly drugged with the ether's fumes?

Still another unsolved mystery which might be cleared up by the use of ether is that surrounding the murder of Frederick E. Rueckert, the Hoboken, New Jersey millionaire. He was shot down by an unknown assassin on his return to his apartment from an evening at the opera.

Rueckert was to have been married in a few days to Miss Clara E. Vorrath. But on the dresser in the room where he was confronted by his murderer was a photograph of Miss Mae Trask. And this attractive young woman declared that she, too, had once been the dead man's fiancee.

Although Miss Trask may not realize that she possesses any clue to the mystery is it not possible that if she were to tell under the influence of ether the whole story of her relations with Rueckert she might reveal some hint that would enable the police to run down his murderer?

Further experiments in the use of ether in criminal investigations will be watched with interest to see whether this drug may not prove of the greatest service to the police and the courts in clearing the innocent of suspicion and punishing the guilty.

Paris At Last Revolts

Senator Lamarzelle After a Speech of Wanton Has a New

"An aroused public opinion is beginning to assert itself, and here and there, in various parts of Paris indignant citizens have torn down or pasted over the more objectionable parts of the poster displays on the billboards."

A Repulsive Poster Advertising One of the Evil Plays Complained Of by Senator Lamarzelle.

PARIS, May 25, 1921.

At last the determined efforts of Senator Lamarzelle to put some sort of curb upon the immoralities and nuditties of the Paris theatres and the vulgar poster displays all over the city are having some effect. The police have managed to avoid enforcing the new law which he succeeded in having enacted and which is aimed at the wanton displays which have made Paris notorious of late, but an aroused public opinion is beginning to assert itself, and here and there in various parts of Paris indignant citizens have torn down or pasted over the more objectionable parts of many of the displays on the billboards.

In ringing tones in a speech in the Senate, according to the official records of his address as contained in the "Journal Officiel," the Senator said:

"I have cited a piece, 'L'Amour en Folie,' the mere title of which quite sufficiently indicates the character of the play. Here are the scenes: The competition of naked backs, la femme en folie, the dance of flagellation, exciting decolletes, the beauties crucified, the fan of flesh!

"Here is the way this piece was publicly advertised in the newspapers of Paris:

"'L'Amour en Folie': It is a captivating debauch of stage pictures that are more than daring. The competition of the naked backs, the beauties crucified, the dance of flagellation, the fan of flesh have tested the very limit of daring in mise en scene. In one word, it is frantically thrilling and passionately exciting."

And again, in making plain in all his view was not unjustified the Senator named a dramatic production at one of the theatres which was so abominable that the editor of a stage publication said the story of the plot was unprintable and omitted it from his paper. "The critic of another great newspaper of Paris," the Senator continued, "announced that he was not able to print the story of the play in French, so he gave it in Greek!"

Senator Lamarzelle is a fine type of broad-minded, decent-thinking man, who has the intelligence to appreciate the difference between true art and lewdness, the exploitation of which has been found very profitable by many in Paris. Senator Lamarzelle does not assume any sanctimonious personality. He might willingly shake hands with the "September Morn" maid and appreciate her for what she represents in real art. But he realizes that the disgusting posters and immoral stage exhibitions which have been a disgrace to Paris since the war ended are a vicious influence which is poisoning the souls of the people of his beloved France.

Last July Senator Lamarzelle made such an effective, exhaustive, compelling argument in the French Senate against permitting such corrupting influences to exist in the French capital, from which this noxious stream of vice flows into the provinces, that while he was taken in a sort of jocular way by his fellow senators when he began he finished convincing his colleagues sufficiently to make them pass the reform law he demanded.

This law gave the right and power to the Mayors and the Prefects of France to suppress immediately anything which, in their personal judgment, they might consider obscene or against the public morals. But although Senator Lamarzelle's reform law is on the statute books it is practically non-operative; it is scarcely anything more than a dead letter.

To be sure, shortly after the Senator made his attack upon the profligacy of the theatre and the billboards of Paris there was a sudden boom in the sale of tulle, which caused a rise in its price, owing to the rush of the theatrical managers to buy up a quick supply to veil the nudity that was conspicuous in their theatres, and bring their establishments more into a semblance of being respectable.

But tulle is a very frail and flimsy fabric and does not, at best, last long. The ravages of theatrical wear soon reduced the spider-web-like tissues into unwearable batches of rags, and a new supply was never considered necessary by the managers, who soon forgot that a restrictive law had been passed. The theatres relapsed into their old methods. The police winked the other eye and the managers busied themselves counting their money.

When the Senator saw that his efforts to reform, in some measure, the stage of Paris had been nullified by the inaction of the authorities, he went before his colleagues of the Senate again and asked why the provisions of the law were not being enforced. He spoke again about the disgusting billboards of Paris and the wanton display of nudity on the stage. He seemed to have the sympathy of the Senate, which agreed that it was an outrage to allow such things to go on.

Even the Minister of the Interior, as well as the Keeper of the Seals, publicly agreed with the Senator and assured him he would have their fullest co-operation in the work he had undertaken. They told him they would devote all the power and authority of the offices they held to see that the provisions of the new law were carried out by the Mayor and Prefects.

Just after all these assurances two new revues were produced in Paris—one at the Casino de Paris, the other at the Folies Bergere. No defiance could be more brazenly flaunted before the French lawmakers than by what was produced publicly in these two revues.

The Casino de Paris has, in a way, reduced its exhibition of feminine nudity; that is, Mlle. Dherlys, the girl who has stood as the queen of nudress in the theatres for some years past, is not, as she usually is, in the revue. One familiar form, at least, is missing. But Mlle. Dherlys's absence has not caused them to neglect this feature of their entertainment. The drawing power of Mlle. Dherlys's beautiful form was considered so great that they have thought it necessary to have several samples of nature's feminine work to supplant her.

Very Scantily Draped Live Feminine Figures Used Instead of the Usual Statuary in the Colossal Mantel Candelabra and Other Scenery in the Revue at the Folies Bergere.

A Live Statue Supporting a Mirror.

Whatever moral improvement the directors of the Casino de Paris have made in the performance is more than equaled by the grossness of an objectionable poster with which they have placarded Paris to advertise their show. Some posters may be objectionable, yet funny; others may be shocking, but artistic; but the latest one made for the Casino de Paris revue, "Avec le Sourire," which represents a chicken laying an egg—a seemingly harmless, farm-like operation in itself—has been conceived in such a manner that it is the most obnoxious poster ever pasted on the walls of Paris. And this, too, only a few weeks after Senator Lamarzelle had been assured of the great interest of the authorities in cleansing Paris!

It is rather encouraging, however, to see that in some districts of Paris, as already stated, private individuals have taken matters into their own hands, and have torn down or pasted over these monstrously repugnant pseudo-works of art.

But in spite of Senator Lamarzelle and the French Senate the Folies Bergere has this time far exceeded the limit of anything ever before done in Paris in the way of obscenity on the stage. It is, indeed, a sad commentary on the modesty of women that a theatre manager can find women ready to accept such roles. The manager offers no more than a role—a costume does not exist. Never has such suggestiveness been so publicly exploited as it is in the present revue at the Folies Bergere.

To see absolutely naked women, not only walking about indifferently, without the least concern, among the groupings on the stage, as if they were fully clothed in a drawing-room, but actually, striving to get into close proximity to the footlights, so that their charms may be more readily appreciated, is startling and repulsive to any one who respects womanhood.

There are so many naked women on the stage of the Folies Bergere, they are so common that it is a pleasant relief to the monotony to see some woman with clothes on! Those who are supposed to be clothed at the Folies are even worse in the effect they make than those who are really naked. The designs of the so-called dresses seem to accentuate the nakedness. Whether it be a flimsy, transparent veil that reveals everything more fully that it is supposed to hide, designed so that some one part of the body is made to stand out in such bold relief that it is an irresistible target for all eyes, or whether it be a few strings of pearls or bands of gems, the frailty of the arrangement of which causes constant anxiety in the audience for fear of some accident, all are arranged with the one great idea to be as suggestive as possible.

One of the scenes in the Folies revue represents an immense mantel, having a centerpiece upon it, the striking figure of which is a seated nude woman holding a tablet. On each side of the mantel are candelabra, composed of three nude women supporting an immense lustre of crystal. The mantel itself is upheld by two nude women, so that in this setting nine nude women appear.

Mlle. Mitty, a clever, talented dancer—in fact, one of the best seen in Paris for a long time—is clothed in a few bands of pearls—not a very secure and sure arrangement for a young lady who is throws about in a wild manner by her dancing partner, doing all sorts of contortions and acrobatic exertions that would test the strength of some the best-advertised ready-made garments.

Mlle. Mitty's costume is a source of anxiety to the more particular of the audience every time she starts to dance. As you look at her being so roughly thrown about and consider what she is wearing, it does not take an extraordinary imagination to conjure before you the possible catastrophe that might happen if anything went wrong. When she safely gets off the stage you could almost hear a sigh of relief come from some of the audience, as much as to say: "Well, thank goodness, she got through that time all right."

In the Turkish bath scene in the same revue the delicate arrangement conceived by the director to give the appearance of absolute nudity to the girls in the bath is too intimate to be described here. That he has been thoroughly successful nobody fails to observe. This is quite the most daring thing ever attempted in Paris.

While these exhibitions of suggestiveness are being given on the stage there are about the streets near the theatres hundreds of girls and women, black and white, of all nationalities, some pretty, some not, most of them young, but many old enough to be pensioned, but all with a stereotyped amiability that belongs to their trade. They insist upon accosting you at every step, calling you endearing names and giving you their best and sweetest smile. They are most importunate, and you have to repulse them to get them to leave you alone—sometimes even to rudeness, and often to fight them off—some men really do this, too. They are not interesting as conversationalists, as they only know one topic to talk about.

Then, for fear that your cravings have not been entirely satisfied, the management has kindly placed signs all about the place to allow you to go still further into the mire of depravity. The signs are in English and read: "To See Paris by Night Ask for a Folies Bergere Guide."

The subject of obscurious posters, which have disgraced the walls of Paris for some years, was treated most fully by Senator Lamarzelle before the Senate. The posters which have been designed to advertise some of the theatres have been immoral eye-sores to self-respecting people, not only in the pictures shown, but in the titles given to the pieces being presented. Some of these titles were more obnoxious than the pictures.

In fact, many respectable citizens of the gay French capital assert that the suggestive posters are a greater power for evil than the abominations in the theatres and music halls and the low sight resorts self-respecting people need not go to these wretched places of amusement, but there is no way to escape the disgusting and suggestive posters which stare children and young people in the face from the billboards.

Senator Lamarzelle made a remarkable statement before the French Senate in making his recent interpellation as to why the law passed last year was not being enforced my the Mayors and Prefects of the country, to whom power had been given to suppress anything which, in their judgment, was obscene or immoral or against the public morals. The Senator stated that this law made the Mayors and the police the masters of the cafe concerts, music halls and theatres where these moral outrages are being committed, yet, since the law has been passed, these places have been just as bold as before.

The official record of Senator Lamarzelle's address, as contained in the "Journal Officiel," reads:

"I understand very well that my role is a difficult one. Last year I made an expose that was analogous. Unhappily, nothing has resulted from it and I now have new facts to bring to you about the same subject. (Cries of 'Speak! Speak!')

"I am here," continued Senator Lamarzelle, "not only because I desire it myself, but because my colleagues on all sides with whom I have spoken have replied to me: 'Go ahead. We will be with you.'

"The Senate waited vainly to see the scandal of the piece, 'L'Amour en Folie,' stopped immediately; but it continued. That piece was still presented in Paris up to within fifteen days ago! It had more than 300 presentations after the new law was enacted.

"Another example: I noticed in my last intervention a piece entitled 'Mais les hommes n'en auront rien,' which managed to arrive at a point so scandalous that Monsieur Antoine, in his theatrical publication 'L'Information,' has declared that, in spite of his willingness to do so, it was absolutely impossible for him to write the story of the play. The critic of another great negspaper of Paris announced that he was not able to print the story of the play in French, so he gave it in Greek! (Laughter.) I have had this translated by our honorable colleague, Monsieur Berard, and it is enough for me to tell you that it is the description of monstrous vices—vices unnamable and veritable indignities.

"I have waited, like the Senate itself, no doubt, to see the posters of this piece quit the walls of Paris. But it was authorized by the Prefet of the Police!—the piece has had 150 representations!

"Everything has continued just as if the Senate had not expressed its formal wish to see these scandals cease.

"You are going to tell me, perhaps, that you would not intervene in these matters too brusquely; that it would be better to await the stopping of the scandals by the interested ones themselves—the directors of the theatres—after they have had several warnings. No, the scandals are revealed not only in the pieces already cited, but in the new pieces being produced. I can give you examples. I beg your pardon in advance for the titles of the plays I am going to quote.

"They played at Paris a piece, which had 200 representations, called 'Le Beguin du Regiment.' The first act is called 'The Chicken of the Colonel;' the second, 'The Pig Philemon;' the third, 'All for One.'

"The play had 200 representations at Paris and, naturally, it went into the provinces. But there happened to be a courageous Mayor who, knowing what it was, prevented its being produced. I refer to the Mayor of Rochelle.

"At Roche-sur-Yon the fathers of families raised protests and said that they would not permit it. The Mayor replied, and I recommend his response to the Prefet of the Police and the Minister of the Interior, 'How can I prohibit a piece being presented here that has had 200 representations in Paris under the authorisation of the police?' In spite of all the protestation of the fathers of families the play was allowed to be produced, and the posters were allowed to post posters, of which I have a description which my correspondent has sent me.

"I will not read it to you; it is too much of the garbage can. I will tell you, however, that this poster was placed on the public buildings, it was spread out on the walls of the Mayor's office, as well as a college for young girls, rue de Nantes, and on the school building in the rue Penelon. Crowds of young girls stopped in front of the posters and opened their eyes widely. This is what has been permitted to be done!

"Come back to Paris. In front of my door is an advertising column, pasted over with such posters that I do not have to put myself much out to get documents to bring to the Senate in this affair. There, on a poster, is a woman nearly nude, covered with accessories which are intended to intensify the nudity rather than hide it. The title, 'Tout feu, tout femme.' This is one of the latest creations.

"That which a year ago was only making

Against Vulgar Plays and Posters

Indignation at the Exhibitions Reform Law Enacted but the Police Fail to Enforce It and Determined Citizens Cover Up Offensive Posters

its debut in the theatre is now in full blast. They have the shame to paste all over the walls of Paris the poster of a play entitled 'Le Marquis de Sade'—the sad hero of whom Napoleon said: 'I regret that I have not at my disposition a law which would permit me to crush him.' This poster still figures in certain parts of Paris. It represents a nude woman on an operating table, hair dishevelled, seeming to suffer indescribable tortures, the eyes bulging out of her head.

"That is what is offered to the blase crowd who, having utilized all the pleasures, can find nothing but cruelty to satisfy their sensual desires. Here is what is happening in Paris. This is what the police tolerate."

"It is craziness," called out Monsieur Henry Cheron, of the Committee of Finances.

"Certainly it is," replied Senator Lamarzelle, "only I do not think it should be encouraged."

"You are absolutely right," responded Monsieur Cheron. "I can do no less than approve you."

"There is another poster," continued Senator Lamarzelle, "which carries the name of the theatre and then the title of the piece, 'Ah non! pas toute nue!' It represents a woman, natural size, in reality she is not absolutely nude; she has for her costume a pair of peek-a-boo stockings.

"This poster is not only an attraction, but it is a criticism on the jurisprudence actually in vogue in the courts and with the police. By virtue of the technical ruling of courts and police there is no nudity, no public outrage to the decency of the theatre as long as the nude subject wears a little piece of some sort of material or a jewel.

"I have in my desk a letter from the secretary of the league founded by Monsieur Berenger, which informs me that he had witnessed a piece called 'La Ceinture de Venus,' where the legal ruling mentioned above was formally typified and accepted. My correspondent said: 'The grossest realism and the most sordid ideas are legalized and permitted by the police and also, most probably, by the courts.'

"Under such circumstances, I ask myself: 'Truly, who are they mocking here?' If it is the author of these investigations it has no importance. But they mock the entire Senate, which has unanimously voted the new reform law. It is in formal violation of its wishes that such things exist and that such scandals are spread out before us!"

Senator Lamarzelle said that the cesspool of vice that is created by the theatres is not only poisoning the morals of the Parisians, but is polluting the social life of the provinces. And it does not stop there. It is invading the realms of art, for the museums are following the movement.

"Our colleague, Monsieur Chastenet," said Senator Lamarzelle, "after having visited the museums, wrote in his report to the Beaux arts:

"'We have found there in much less numbers decorating the walls, the admirable works of those masters of mural decoration such as Audran, Nanteuil, Jean Peone, Laurent Caro, Chedel, Coehlin and Le Bas and others who have made the glory of the old French school. On the contrary, the works displayed in the places of honor are all modern, feebly executed in unsatisfying dry point, with a character that is ignoble and superficial; decorations in questionable water colors which make a very poor showing when placed in the neighborhood of the works of the masters of the times gone by. Time goes on, but we can perhaps ask, if, by reason of recent discoveries and the modern technique, mural decoration and the making of tapestries is not a lost art. The modern artist tries to show that he has discovered the lost secrets of art by making nudes that are provoking, aggressive and monstrous. But there are nudes and nudes, the nude simple, true, with a sort of candor is the real artistic nude and would not offend any person who did not have a corrupt mind.'"

Senator Lamarzelle told the Senate that his friends had commended his crusade against the vice that exists in the theatres, but they did not think he had gone far enough. They told him that the scandalous things that are happening in the streets, public places, omnibuses, the metro (which is the underground railway) are to be decried even more, for the police look upon these things with a complacency which almost amounts to an interest.

"Here is the danger of the theatre," continued Senator Lamarzelle. "The exploitation of corruption has come into our streets and enters more and more into our public morals. The young girls see that, also the little children, and you can well understand the lessons they draw from it. The Government cannot look upon a society decaying.

"You have a great responsibility, the power is within your hands. It does not accomplish much to punish the immorality of the individual, but to follow up and punish the public exploitation of immorality is fruitful, for there is an offense—I was going to say crime—you can take hold of, for it is there, tangible."

Monsieur Lamarzelle sat down amid the plaudits and congratulations of his confreres. He was followed by Monsieur Pierre Marraud, the Minister of the Interior, who explained, for the Government, just what steps had been taken to make the law against immorality active. He agreed with Senator Lamarzelle that not much had been accomplished so far, but pledged his support for the future. He said:

"I have a constant fear for general order in the nation, and I think that, among the problems that ought to have the sanction of the Government, the moral health of the country figures in the first line. I think the maintenance of morals will give to the country one of the conditions essential for its re-establishment. We must preserve our population and, in particular, our young people, from a contamination which brings with it the seeds of death."

Monsieur Bonnevay, Keeper of the Seals, followed, and pledged his support to the movement. He even went further and said that the control of what appears on the stage and on the bilboards is not enough. He said:

"There are many obscene discourses and dialogues given in the theatres, which, under existing laws, cannot be stopped, nor can their authors be prosecuted. I want to say to the Senate that, in the near future, I hope to take up a project which will permit us to prosecute, before the correctional tribunal, the authors and producers of these discourses and dialogue the obscene thoughts and menaces which are now rampant in the theatre."

"I will conclude by saying," continued the Keeper of the Seals, "that there exists in Paris a certain number of people who seek to build up their scandalous fortunes on the ruins of public morals. (Cries of 'Very good!' 'Very good!') That is the most deplorable of speculations and the most infamous. (Much applause.) And I want to declare plainly to the Senate that the courts and tribunals will run down, with even more vigor than all the others, the profiters of obscenity." (Loud applause.)

Senator Lamarzelle took the floor again and said to the Minister of Interior and Keeper of Seals: "Your administration is admirably armed with the laws which now exist. If, following the revelation of an immorality, flagrant and abominable, like that which I exposed before you a few minutes ago, the prefect of the police would make a director of a theatre come to his cabinet and say to him, as did a certain mayor of the provinces, whom you applauded a short time ago, 'If this piece continues to be presented as it now is I will stop its production,' you would see all these obscenities cease at once."

"It is Paris which poisons the provinces," suggested Monsieur Bouveri.

"That is true," concluded Senator Lamarzelle.

The vicious influence of the stage has been felt in other directions. There are many who would like to see Senator Lamarzelle go further and attempt reforms in other fields.

Among other things the drug habit has grown tremendously since the war. In Montmartre the sale of cocaine goes on briskly in the night cafes and restaurants. Cocaine is the favorite drug in Paris on account of its convenience to carry and ease with which it may be taken. The girls of Montmartre have acquired an almost universal habit of sniffing it up their nose from the flat end of a nail file. So every "snow bird" in Montmartre has a nail file as part of her regular equipment.

It would be thought that the high price which is charged for cocaine would make it prohibitive except for a millionaire. The price charged in the night places is 50 francs a gramme, which would run up into the thousands of dollars for a pound at the old rate of exchange. And this is for a cocaine which is not pure cocaine. The traffickers in this drug buy it in crystal form and then increase its bulk, sometimes to triple what they have bought of pure cocaine, by adding quinine or other powders to adulterate it.

The traffic in the sale of cocaine is increasing daily, and this is in face of the arrests being constantly made by the police. The lure of the great profits to be made is greater than the fear of the hand of the law. One night in a recent week seventy-four men and women were arrested for selling dope in a small territory in Montmartre that would not comprise half a New York block. But this did not deter others from doing the same thing the next night in the same places.

In the upper demimonde, if there can be such a thing, the smoking of opium has taken a strong hold. It seems that smoking opium gives the greatest opportunities for taking a drug in a luxurious way. So many apartments in Paris have their opium den, but not the opium dens we have seen pictured on the stage and in stories, but a room magnificently furnished in Chinese style, with mysterious lighting and couches with the opium layout beside them.

One of the results of the amazing increase in the use of druxs is seen in the ages of the women and girls who frequent the cafes and restaurants and the "premenoirs" of the music halls. Before the war the average age of these women was about twenty-five years; now they are nearly all young girls of about nineteen. In the time gone by, before dope secured such a hold in the underworld of Paris, these girls, while they were very clever in getting others to drink were clever enough not to drink themselves. Very little real drinking was done by them—they made a semblance of it, that was all.

As dope was, comparatively speaking, but little used, these girls had little to make an inroad upon their health, so they kept their youth, looks and freshness, and one was surprised at the length of time they would last at what would seem an arduous profession. At Maxim's you could see girls who had been there for eighteen or twenty years and still showing no signs of decrepitude!

But the drug habit, coming in, as it did, with the war, has caused havoc among these women. While they did not take to drink they have fallen into the drug habit in an appalling way. They do not last now longer than two or three years, and generally a couple of seasons sees them on the downward slide. New young girls take their places, only to go the same way by the dope route, and are replaced in turn by other new young girls. Dope has made the life of gayety a short one in Paris.

It is hard for an American to get the point of view of the Paris police and police courts. A dance in the nude, or nearly so, the police argue, is artistic, esthetic and elevating, and therefore there is no reason why something artistically beautiful should be suppressed to please old-fashioned people. Indeed, it is rather intimated that those who see anything wrong in a dancing woman costumed only in a string of pearls must be really evil minded and morally repressed not to be able to distinguish between that which is lofty art and that which is merely physical.

The other day a victorious young American college athlete from the University of California, Mr. Herbert Jay Stowitts, appeared on the French stage. Young Stowitts had been to Porto Rico to study the old West African medicine man's vivid dance which was brought over to Porto Rico by the natives some three hundred years ago. Stowitts took great pains to make an accurate historical study of the dance, and he designed his costume from the description which he found in the old traditional history on the island. He watched the movements of the negroes and copied them faithfully.

But when Stowitts produced his historical dance the police were shocked. Mlle. Myro, dancing in a costume of pearls, was artistic and elevating and, therefore, unobjectionable, but the young American's historical medicine man's dance was too masculine, too ferocious, too primitive—and, therefore, brutalizing and thus inartistic and improper.

And the police of Paris stopped the dance of the second performance!

But in spite of the powerful influence behind the Paris officials to prevent them from interfering with the notorious night life of the gay French capital, there are signs that forces are at work to curb the vicious stage and poster abominations which Senator Bouveri and Senator Lamarzelle had in mind when they agreed that:

"It is Paris which poisons the provinces."

Burlesque Efforts to Enforce the New Reform Law.

But the Charming Mlle. Myro, Dressed Only in a Costume of Luminous Pearls, in a Startling New Revue at the Casino de Paris, Was Not Interfered With. So Long as a Woman Performer Wears a Scrap of Clothing as Large as a Handkerchief, or Even a String of Pearls, It Is Construed Under the Law as "a Costume," and, Therefore, Unobjectionable.

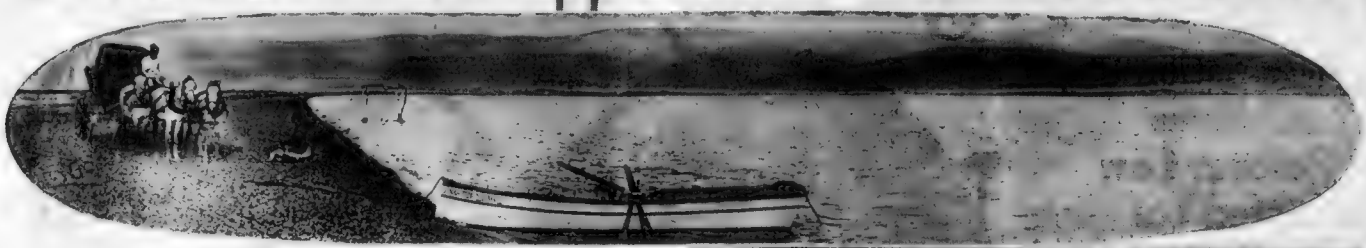
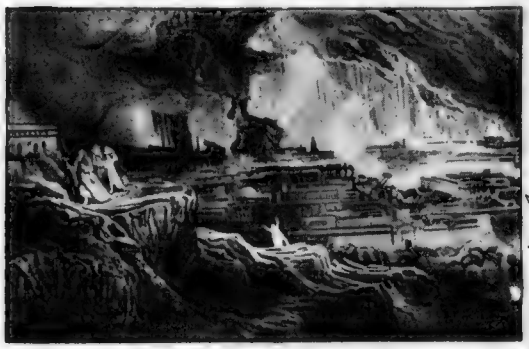
To Find Out What Happened to Sodom and Gomorrah



Modern Photograph of the Barren Wilderness of the Dead Sea.

Science Believes It Can Corroborate the Bible Narrative That the "Wicked Cities of the Plain" Were Literally Destroyed by Fire and Brimstone



Lot and His Daughters Leaving the Doomed City. From Mezzotint by the British Painter John Martin.

Dead Sea Fruit.
The "Apple of Sodom" Which Collapses When Touched, and Contains Nothing but Dust and Fluff, a Very Remarkable but Worthless Fruit Which Grows Around the Dead Sea and Nowhere Else.

The Destruction of the Wicked City of Sodom by Fire and Brimstone. From Painting by Beraud.

WHAT really became of the wicked cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, whose destruction is so graphically described in the Bible?

With the establishment of civilized government in Palestine and its commercial development, scientists and scholars will have an opportunity to investigate this and other problems of surpassing interest.

The incomplete investigations of Professor Ellsworth Huntington of Yale University, of Professor George Frederick Wright of Oberlin College and others have already accumulated strong scientific evidence that the wicked cities were really overwhelmed with fire and brimstone and that their ruins lie beneath the mysterious waters of the Dead Sea.

Bible students and scientists are now planning to explore thoroughly the shores of the Dead Sea and take soundings on the sea bottom in the hope of locating the ruins of these ancient "wicked cities of the plain." This work, which the Turkish Government has heretofore forbidden, can at last be safely undertaken, because Palestine is now under the protection of Christian powers.

In the Book of Genesis chapter xix we read:

"Then the Lord rained upon Sodom and Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the Lord out of heaven. And he overthrew those cities, and all the plain, and all the inhabitants of the cities, and that which grew upon the ground."

From very ancient times people believed that the cities thus destroyed were buried beneath the waters of the Dead Sea. The modern geologists declared that there was no volcanic centre in this region from which fire could have been rained on the cities. And now, still some modern scientists have found evidence that there was an immense volcanic explosion due to an underlying deposit of bitumen that after a vast conflagration which destroyed the wicked cities, the waters poured in and gradually subsided, and that the river Jordan filled up the depression that is filled by the Dead Sea.

According to this theory, which seems to be supported very completely by the facts of Genesis, the river Jordan would flow to-day the principal affluent of the Dead Sea originally flowed across the fertile plain on which Sodom and Gomorrah stood and found its way into the Red Sea through a rocky channel, which even now remains though dry, to tell the story.

Thus it is not at all surprising that the ruins of Sodom and Gomorrah have never been satisfactorily located, such as they are on the bottom of a salt lake which occupies the deepest chasm to be found anywhere on the land surface of the earth. The Dead Sea is 1,278 feet deep and its surface is 1,860 feet below the level of the Mediterranean.

The catastrophe occurred in the lifetime of Abraham, who, as the Bible tells us, was an eye-witness of it. Abraham was not a native of Palestine. He was born in or near the city of Ur, in Babylonia, and had removed himself and his family to what was later known as Judea, bringing with him Lot (his nephew according to some accounts), who, with his two daughters, was the only survivor of the calamity that befel the doomed towns.

Thus it might be said that Abraham and Lot were immigrants. Ur, whence they came, was about six hundred miles east of Jerusalem. It was a much more ancient city than Babylon and in earlier days had been a great commercial and political centre.

The Bible tells us that Abraham and Lot at first jointly pastured their cattle in the southern part of the land of Canaan, and that afterward, when the two parted company, Lot journeyed eastward, having decided that the plain of the Jordan offered better opportunities for grazing (Genesis xiii, 11-13).

The district is described as rich and well watered and is compared in the Bible to the fertile and flat lands of lower Egypt. There were located the "Cities of the Plain" referred to in the Scriptures. To suppose that such a description could be meant to apply to the narrow margin of the Dead Sea, where some students of Bible lore have been accustomed to place Sodom and Gomorrah, seems unreasonable.

In the quarrel settled by no less an authority than Moses, who writes: "The name of the kings who fought in the vale of Siddim, and the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah. All these (kings) were joined together in the vale of Siddim, which is the salt sea" (Genesis xiv).

In other words, Moses says that in the field of Siddim a decisive battle was fought between the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah and (2) what he (although writing at a time when he wrote some centuries later) beneath the waters of the Dead Sea.

Moses presumably knew and his testimony is to be accepted the fact that Sodom and Gomorrah were built on a plain which is now the bottom of the Dead Sea may be regarded as established.

We are told that Abraham, when he got up early in the morning of the day following the catastrophe, "looked toward Sodom and Gomorrah, and toward all the land of the plain, and lo! the smoke of the country went up as the smoke of a furnace."

The whole landscape, in short, was on fire. It is not stated that Abraham saw a lake where the plain had been. There was no lake for him to see. But Moses, writing centuries afterward, speaks of the lake, or "salt sea," which had meanwhile been formed by the waters of the Jordan flowing down from the north and filling the abyss.

Before the volcanic convulsion occurred a flat valley lay between the mountains of Judah on the west and the mountains of Moab on the east. It was a plain of remarkable fertility through which flowed the Jordan irrigating the land by natural and perhaps also by artificial channels. Thence, continuing its southward course, the river finally emptied into the eastern horn of the Red Sea.

There were five "cities of the plain"—Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zeboiim and Bela. We are told that, while Abraham dwelled in the land of Canaan, Lot dwelled in the cities of the plain, and pitched his tent toward Sodom." This was shortly before, as it would seem, the whole doom fell out of the landscape, swallowing up the valley and, incidentally, the cities. First, presumably, there was a tremendous earthquake; volcanic explosions followed, and the cataclysm wound up with a subsidence of the area which the plain had occupied. It may be that the ejected material left a vast hollow place beneath the floor of the valley, causing it to cave in.

Probably Lot, for convenience in pasturing his herds, moved about from the neighborhood of one town to that of another. At the moment when the eruption was imminent we find him occupying a house in Sodom, where his family, no doubt, were looking after his cattle not far away.

At all events, while Lot was at home one evening, two angels (or men) told him that Sodom was about to be destroyed, and that he must get out of the place with all delay. "Escape for thy life!" they said. "Look not behind. Escape to the mountains, lest thou be consumed!"

They told Lot that the only womenfolk could find safety in a city called Zoar, which to-day is at the southern end of the Dead Sea. "Hasten there at once and flee from us."—Book of Genesis.

Unfortunately, as will be remembered, Lot's wife disobeyed an express injunction of the angels. After leaving the doomed town she looked back and was immediately turned into a pillar of salt.

A pillar of rock salt in the Jebel Usdum range, by the way, is to-day pointed out as Lot's wife. The identification, however, may be said to lack proof.

Lot and his two daughters were so frightened by the fiery convulsion that they left Zoar and hid for a while in a cave in the mountains.

The Koran, which is the Mohammedan Bible, makes a number of references to Lot, describing him as a teacher of righteousness. And the Arabs, who are of that religion, call the Dead Sea the Sea of Lot.

It is all a very interesting story. To-day the Dead Sea, a body of water forty-seven miles long and nine and a half miles in greatest width, lies between the mountains of Judah and the mountains of Moab, occupying the area supposed to have been formerly covered by the vanished "plain of the Jordan." Having no outlet, it has gradually accumulated salts of sodium, magnesium are derived from the rocks of the land), until now it holds in suspension 25 per cent of solids. On account of its composition no fish can live in it.

If emptied of water it would present to the eye an aspect most strange and weird. For it is indeed an abyss. In places the depth, as ascertained by soundings, drops suddenly from twenty feet or so to more than a thousand feet. Until very recent years it was a matter of common belief that the Dead Sea had no bottom, but that notion was held merely because no lines were available that were long enough to plumb its profundities.

When the floor of that valley dropped out it certainly fell a tremendous distance, but no bottomless abyss can exist.

The present prolongation of the valley of the Jordan three hundred miles from the river's source to the eastern branch of the Red Sea is an important and striking feature in the topography of the Holy Land, and indicates plainly that the stream formerly emptied into the Red Sea. It confirms the Scriptural story of a great convulsion which, interrupting the course of the river, converted the fertile plain into a lake—the "salt sea" of which Moses speaks.

All the valley to the southward was thereby changed into a sandy desert. The Jordan could no longer reach its ancient outlet, but, flowing into the vast chasm, gradually formed the lake which to-day we call the Dead Sea.

The sea covers three hundred and sixty square miles, which we may suppose was the approximate area of the plain on which the five doomed cities were located. A fairly extensive district.

In various parts of the world are to be found other cities, or records of them more or less authentic, which, according to popular belief or tradition, were destroyed by divine anger on account of their wickedness. A recent and familiar instance is that of St. Pierre, on the island of Martinique, which was literally burned off the map, together with neighboring villages, when, in 1902, Mont Pelee blew its head off. Clouds of burning gas accomplished the result in that case, and there was no lack of pulpit utterances calling attention to the fact that St. Pierre had been notoriously one of the most immoral towns on the globe, and therefore fit for punishment.

Pompeii, in the year 79 A. D., was destroyed by hot ashes from Vesuvius. It was the fashionable Summer resort of Rome, rather famous for its immoral dissipations, and perhaps the wickedest town in ancient Italy.

In Syria an extinct volcanic crater is occupied by a lake, called the Birket Ram, which is said to cover a village whose population was wiped out because it refused hospitality to a poor traveler.

In Wales there are several lakes, each of which is said to flow above a town drowned because of the misconduct of its people. Their church bells may even now be heard on occasions, pealing in a lively way.

Familiar in literature is the "apple of Sodom," otherwise called the "Dead Sea fruit." It is no myth. Josephus, the historian (who wrote about 100 A. D.), speaks of it as "beautiful to the eye, but filling the mouth with bitter ashes."

It Is Believed That the Ruins of Sodom and Gomorrah Will Be Found at the Bottom of the Dead Sea (A). Before the Dead Sea Was Formed There Existed There a Fertile Plain, the Site of Sodom and Gomorrah. The Great Cataclysm Which Overwhelmed the Cities Produced the Declivity Into Which the River Jordan Flows, Forming the Dead Sea and Covering the Ruins.

This fruit (which is found even at the present time in the vicinity of the Dead Sea), is not an apple at all. It is a big gall that grows on dwarf oak trees—very pretty to look at, glossy, of a purplish-red color, about two inches in diameter. One might easily imagine it to be good to eat but it is filled with a substance which readily crumbles to a fine powder, horribly bitter to the taste.

According to native tradition, the contents of the Dead Sea apple are really ashes from the ancient burning of Sodom and Gomorrah.

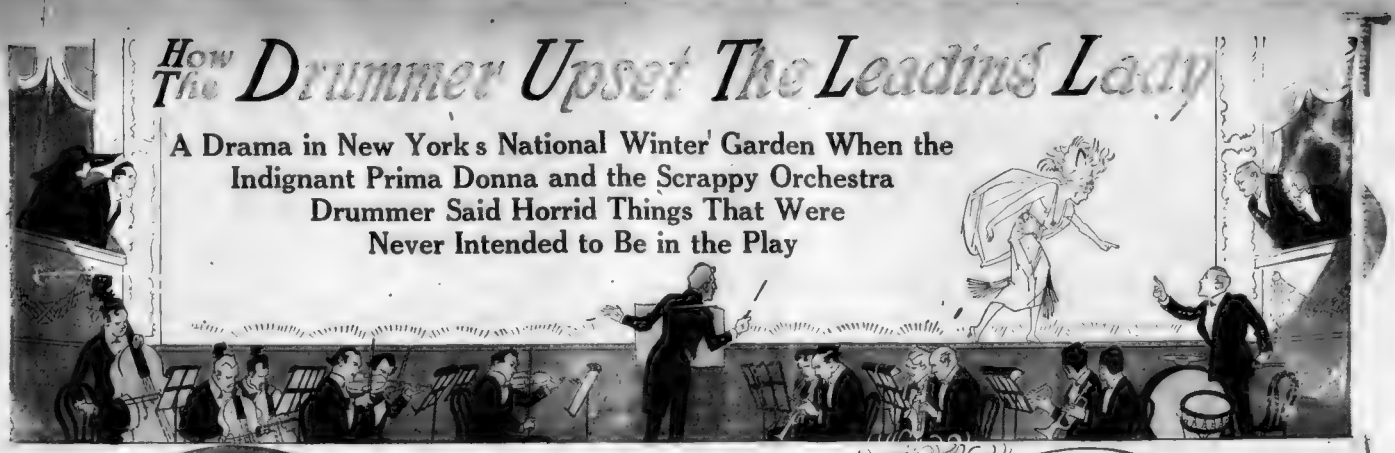
How The Drummer Upset The Leading Lady

A Drama in New York's National Winter Garden When the Indignant Prima Donna and the Scrappy Orchestra Drummer Said Horrid Things That Were Never Intended to Be in the Play



Miss Lucille Rogers, the Prima Donna, in a Very Determined Pose.

"'Mind your own business,' said the prima donna.
"'I'll do as I please,' answered the drummer.
"'You'll keep your mouth shut or I'll find a way to shut it,' cried she.
"Then," says Miss Rogers, "the now enraged drummer jumped right out of his drums and made for her."

Miss Rogers as Santuzza in Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana."

A CAT may look at a king, but a drummer must not make faces at a prima donna. Neither may he mutter derogatory remarks about her loud enough for the adjacent audience to hear.

Even if a drummer does make a prima donna see red and she keeps on asking him to put it back whenever she sees him, no matter where he is or with whom, still that doesn't give him license to call her names or start to climb up out of the orchestra and over the footlights in an effort to express his exasperation at closer range, or generally, in fact, upset her while she is exercising her art.

These interesting and unusual points of artistic and operatic etiquette were all raised and decided recently at a hearing of a complaint by Miss Lucille Rogers, prima donna of the National Winter Garden, New York, against Mr. Louis Weissman, the talented drummer of the opera house's orchestra. The case, upon which Judge Bernard J. Douras passed, attracted quite as much attention in musical circles as Mary Garden's alleged attempt some time ago to break up Geraldine Farrar's caroling of the woes and joys of poor Madame Butterfly. Miss Garden, it was reported, did this by sitting in the front row of the opera house and waving a huge and gorgeous fan throughout the entire performance.

The summons to Mr. Weissman read:

"In the name of the people of the State of New York, to Louis Weissman, No. 111 East Houston street

"Complaint having been made by Lucille Rogers that you did commit the offence of disorderly conduct, you are hereby summoned to appear before me or any city magistrate holding this court, at Second avenue and Second street, on the fifth day of May, 1921, at nine o'clock a. m., to the end that an investigation may be made of said complaint."

At that hour an extremely handsome lady, with charming curves and a red hat and a red vesture, appeared. She was almost entirely surrounded by attorneys and sympathetic friends. Her eyes and manner spelled artistic temperament. She was the prima donna.

Immediately afterward there came in a tall, thin, good-looking young gentleman, who wore his clothes very tight, his mustache very small and turned up, and his hair brushed back to a shining smoothness. He, also, was surrounded by attorneys and sympathetic friends, and he, as well, exuded that peculiar aura which is called temperament. He was the drummer.

The prima donna cast him a blighting look; he countered it with a supercilious smile.

"You charge Louis Weissman with disorderly conduct, Miss Rogers," said Judge Douras, ringing up the curtain as the prima donna took the stand. "What did he do?"

"He was terrible," answered the prima donna.

"Ha!" said the drummer. Again the two glared at each other.

"How was he terrible?" asked Judge Douras.

"He said—bum," faltered Miss Rogers. "Many times, Your Honor, he said 'bum bum.' At first I thought that he was echoing the drum beats a drum goes 'bum, bum.' But at last I knew that it was not his drum, but me, that he was calling 'bum.'"

"Ha!" said the drummer as the prima donna finished this remarkable sentence.

"And then he would look at me and mumble," she went on. "I could not hear what he said. But I could guess. Oh, judge, it was awful. I would forget to sing while trying to make out what it was that he was calling me. I would have thought that I was in a nightmare had it not been that even when I went out after the play women from the audience stopped and spoke to me and said, 'Why does that man at the drum hate you so?'"

"What," asked Judge Douras as the prima donna's voice broke dramatically and her eyes filled with tears, "what provoked this alleged animosity?"

"Because," answered Miss Rogers most surprisingly, "he owed me money."

There was a little buzz around the courtroom. "Did she say she owed him money?" came a whisper. "No, she said he owed her money." "Why did that make him mad?"

The same thought was in the mind of the puzzled judge.

"But way would that make him treat you so?" he asked. "Most debtors go to great pains to placate their creditors."

"Your Honor," said Miss Rogers solemnly, "let me explain. One of the secrets of success is adapting yourself to conditions. I always do this, and the drummer of an orchestra is an important condition. Indeed The singer depends upon the orchestra. It can help to make her song or it can ruin it. Yes," went on the prima donna vivaciously, further tearing the veil from the mysteries of the higher operatic life, "many an ambitious girl striving for success has met failure because of sunnity in the orchestra. A little bit slower playing, a change of tempo, a subtle change of pitch or of key can throw the singer out, can made her look like a—a dub! The audience does not know it is the orchestra's fault. It only thinks that the singer is a frost.

"And the drummer is the most important. He can spoil the song by playing in the wrong time or by using one of his mass of pipes or things in the wrong place. And he can do things with his drum that make a singer ridiculous. Your Honor, the drummer has more power in his hands than anyone else in the orchestra. Suppose I have finished a dramatic aria of Santuzza in 'Cavalleria Rusticana'—I have put in it all pathos, love longing, broken heart and tragedy—and when I am done the drummer gives two funny little thumps on the bass. Why, everybody laughs. Nobody knows why they laugh, but it does sound so funny, and all the effect that the singer has striven for is gone. The drummer can do that.

"This drummer"—Miss Rogers rose dramatically from her chair and pointed to Mr. Weissman—"did it!"

"Ha!" remarked Mr. Weissman.

"I knew all this," said the prima donna, tones now tremulous, "and I was nice to him. I had him up to my house to meet my friends and to dine with us. He was going out of town one day and I loaned him my dress suit case. Then he began borrowing money from me to go to the country for visits. He had a system, Your Honor. He would borrow, say, twenty dollars and pay me back fifteen of it. Then he would borrow ten dollars and pay me back five or seven-fifty. At last he was sixty dollars in my debt. When this happened I reminded him of it.

"Yes, it is true I reminded him of it often. Quite naturally I asked him to pay me back the money I had loaned him. One day I was going out of the theatre and he was in the lobby with some friends. I said, 'How about that money you owe me?'

"And after that he made my life a hades!"

"Your Honor!" expostulated Mr. Weissman, the very able attorney and brother of the defendant.

"Particularly, madame," observed Judge Douras. "Just what kind of—er—Hades do you allege that the defendant raised? Dante, you will remember, is authority for the statement that there are many variations of geography in the place mentioned."

"Two kinds," replied the prima donna; "one at performances, the other at rehearsals. The last was the worse."

Performances, she went on, were made an ordeal for her by Drummer Weissman's low-pitched and cutting remarks, disconcerting noises on the drum, and a general atmosphere of hostility so thick around the tambours, cymbals, pipes and so on that she shuddered every time she went near.

But rehearsals—ah, the rehearsals when there was no longer the restraining influence of the audience! Prima Donna Rogers showed on the stand how she shuddered on the stage at these rehearsals.

She brought in a score transposed to a lower key to suit her voice, she testified. There was trouble right away. The score was torn up. She protested.

"It is true," said Miss Rogers, "that I touched a music stand with my foot accidentally and that it fell over. It is not true that I deliberately kicked it over from the stage with the intention of hurting anybody."

At any rate, the stand fell over. Then followed a scene not in the play, but enacted with a force and sincerity that would have pleased any audience that had beheld it.

Drummer Weissman arose dramatically, testified Miss Rogers, and cried out to the leader, "Don't you let her get away with any rough stuff like that"—or words to that effect.

Her cup of wrath overflowed. She leaped down the stage and shook a finger at him.

"Mind your own business," she said.

"I'll do as I darned well please," answered the drummer.

"You'll keep your mouth shut or I'll find a way to shut it!" cried the prima donna in her most dramatic tones.

Then, it appeared, the enraged Mr. Weissman had shot right out of his drums and started to climb on the stage. Miss Rogers awaited, intrepidly. Somebody pulled the drummer back; others pulled her away to the wings. All the birds of harmony fled shrieking and the strings of the violins went simultaneously out of tune. The prima donna was so upset that she couldn't go on with the rehearsal.

That night came the last straw. It appeared that at one part of the play the comedian leans over to the drummer and asks for a cigar.

"Give me a cigar!" he demands.

The drummer is supposed to answer "sure" and hand one over the footlights.

Instead of doing this, Miss Rogers said, Drummer Weissman looked up sardonically and said, quite loudly:

"I have no cigar, but I'll gladly get some flowers for our friend there."

By "our friend there," she explained, was meant herself. The sting in the remark lay in the fact, said the prima donna, that no one ever got flowers but herself. The audience was, therefore, led to believe that the gifts of these bouquets were not entirely genuine. This upset her.

Mr. Weissman, in his defense, opined that "Miss Rogers was temperamental and took offense at a lot of things that weren't meant to be so."

"I'll give him credit for one thing," said Miss Rogers. "He knows I can sing. I've heard him say, 'I can't stand that girl, but how she can sing!' And again, 'When she comes on the stage she looks like a million dollars!'"

The prima donna beamed upon the drummer, he looked not at all unpleasantly on her.

"Well," said Judge Douras, after a little thought, "I'll have to ask you to give a bond for a hundred dollars to keep the peace."

"Your Honor," asked Mr. Weissman, surprised, "where would I get a hundred dollars?"

"Haven't you saved any money?" asked His Honor.

"Not a cent," replied the drummer.

A far-away look, a very far-away look, as though she were looking at $60 in the extremely far distance, passed over the prima donna's face. She opened her mouth as though to speak to the drummer—then thought better of it.

Mr. Weissman's attorney promptly furnished the bond.

And now peace dwells again on the stage and in the drummer's corner of the National Winter Garden when the prima donna comes forth.

But another drummer sits there among the drums and cymbals.

But there is one enormously valuable treasure buried on Cocos Island, off the South American coast in the Pacific Ocean, of which there is no possible doubt. This treasure was hurried out of Callao, the capital of Peru, in 1820, when the approaching army of Chile threatened to capture the city

All the gold and silver in the government treasury, all the money in the banks, the treasures and jewels and sacred golden and bejewelled ornaments belonging to the churches and the private wealth and jewelry and valuables belonging to the Viceroy of Peru and the wealthy residents of the city were gathered together under government supervision. This vast and variegated collection of treasure, worth perhaps $150,000,000, was put on board a Peruvian government vessel, and Captain Morgan, of the Peruvian navy, was put in command.

Captain Morgan was ordered to put to sea with his valuable cargo and to wait until it was safe to return. But a storm drove his ship far to the north, almost wrecked his vessel and forced him to select an uninhabited island and to bury it there. He carefully marked with exact-

CHAPTER II.

EARLY one Fall morning in the year 1834, just before the breaking of dawn, a fisherman's wife standing at the open door of her hut, near the village of Codroy, on the shore of Newfoundland, saw a flickering light waved to and fro a quarter of a mile or so across the ice which at that season begins to bind the Newfoundland coast.

To the fisher folk of that coast a waving light on the ice means but one thing—a wreck and sailors in distress.

The alarm was quickly carried from hut to hut. In a few minutes a company of hardy fishermen had gathered and the bravest of its members were picking their way across the treacherous ice toward the spot where the light had flared and died away.

Encouraging shouts brought a feeble response. Dawn broke, and those who watched from the shore saw, far out across the floes, the tiny masts of a foundered fishing smack. Dimly they saw, also, the forms of three men struggling across the ice toward the rescuers, one of them falling repeatedly, to be helped to his feet by his two companions. What had become of the rest of the crew of the wrecked boat was plain—they had gone down ahead of the ship, some of them lost perhaps between the ice floes.

Just as the rescuers reached the party of survivors the man who had fallen so often, and who seemed weaker than the rest, lost his footing and slipped between the grating ice. A cry went up from the rest—for it seemed as if nothing could save the man from being ground to pieces.

But one of the rescuers plunged into the icy water without an instant's hesitation, and, miraculously escaping the ice, brought the exhausted man to the surface of the floe.

The three sailors were helped to land, and each was cared for. The man who made the heroic rescue of the sailor who went down between the ice took his charge to his own hut and there revived him.

This man was near middle age. When he had recovered from his experiences he proved to be rather handsome and had about him an air of mystery which, vague and indefinable as it was, soon attracted the attention of the villagers of Codroy. This suggestion of mystery was augmented when his rescuer, a fisherman by the name of Thomas Keating, reported to his cronies that the stranger had worn, attached to a string about his neck, a leather bag, in which were many ancient but valuable pieces of jewelry—rings set with curious stones, a woman's bracelet of carved amber, a necklace of Egyptian scarabs and jade beads cut intaglio. Sailors gossip and marvel, but they are slow to ask questions of a shipwrecked stranger. The mariner was asked nothing more than his name. This, he said, was William Thompson. More of himself he did not vouchsafe—at that time.

Thompson, who gained the respect of the simple fishermen by his willingness to heave to and take his place among them, displayed a sincere gratitude to Keating, his rescuer. He made his abode in Keating's cottage, and the two men became almost inseparable. To Keating Thompson talked a great deal of adventures at sea, of the South Seas and the interesting waters off the west coast of South America—of Panama, the Isthmus and of the lands of the Incas. These tales Keating repeated to the other fishermen, and their respect grew. Thompson showed no disposition to leave Codroy, but when Keating made one of his periodical trips to Ottawa, where his relatives lived, Thompson entrusted him with the contents of his jewel bag and asked him to sell them for what they would bring.

Keating took back with him several hundred dollars, and of this Thompson insisted that he retain one-half.

To understand all that came after; to know the inspiration of the many later day expeditions to Cocos Island in search of the fortunes buried there; to weigh the hopes and disappointments of the many adventurers who have gone, some of them to lonely graves, along the trail that leads to the hidden gold, one must vision these days in Newfoundland when Thompson, the mysterious shipwrecked sailor, was the guest and debtor for his life of the fisherman, Thomas Keating. It was out of this friendship that there grew all the clues that have led so many men and women along the perilous track of the treasure which inspired the masterpiece of Stevenson.

For this Thompson was the same adventurer and pirate who, as was told on this page last week, was one of those who helped Captain Morgan, of the navy of Peru, bury the $150,000,000 of government gold and jewelry on lonely Cocos Island; the same mutineer who slew the sleeping captain, took from his pocket the map which was the only key to the treasure's hiding place, and then with his treacherous companions took possession of the ship and turned pirate; the same Thompson who had cut the throats of those shipmates whom he did not dare trust in his mutiny, and who had, on the beach of Cocos Island, buried his cutlass in the heart of half a score of the most beautiful women of Peru—the fair passengers who had sought safety with Captain Morgan, only to meet the fate that may not be described in words at the hands of this mutineer and his fellows.

Thompson's unsuccessful attempts to recover the treasure which he had helped to bury and the fate that thwarted him each time were described last week.

After almost a year spent in the little Newfoundland village Thompson told his friend Keating the story of the treasure of Cocos Island, of Captain Morgan's ship and of the mutiny on board after the gold had been buried. Keating took this story with complete faith. He had learned to know his friend by this time and knew, instinctively, that all these things he told him were true. Keating talked about it to his other cronies, and they believed, too.

It was not long until Thompson began to talk of fitting up a boat for an expedition to the far off island. Keating was enthusiastic. Together they discussed the details. Then Thompson one night admitted that he held the only key to the hiding place, and from the leather bag he still wore about his neck he brought forth a tiny piece of parchment paper, on which was outlined, in ink already faded, an island about five miles across in either direction. There were markings of mountains, gulleys, streams and harbors, and on the back of the map there were two arrows with directions for taking sights from a certain point in one of the two harbors. This point, Thompson explained, was the real key to the map, and was, as he expressed it, a "rock that squats and looks like a lion."

Keating fell in with the plan, each day being told more and more of his secret by Thompson. Finally Keating knew that this guest of his was the first officer who had led the mutiny against Captain Morgan, the man who had superintended the burial of the treasure, and the man who had stolen the map from the captain's dead body Keating kept the secret, and sought to find a way to get up an expedition to the island.

Keating knew a sea captain whose home was in Ottawa, the home of Keating's relatives. He made a trip to Ottawa and found the captain, whose name was Bogue, resting there without a ship. He told the story of Thompson, and took the captain to the pawnshops where he had sold the jewelry from Thompson's leather bag. The pawnbrokers described the pieces—some of them had not yet been resold—and Captain Bogue was interested. He returned to the village of Codroy with Keating and heard from Thompson's own lips the story of the buried treasure and of the various other treasure hordes of the pirates also buried on the island. He saw the map and questioned Thompson for many days, drawing from him every detail of his life after the day he shipped out of Callao with Captain Morgan. He had sailed the seas off the west coast of South America, and knew that Thompson was familiar with them. At last he was convinced and agreed to interest some of his friends in providing a ship and the money for an expedition to recover the treasure. He returned to Ottawa, promising to be back within the month

But when he returned he found only Keating.

Thompson, Keating and some others had been caught in a sudden squall off the banks and their smack had capsized. Thompson had suffered more than the others, again saved only by the dogged devotion of Keating Pneumonia gripped his lungs, and he did not recover When he knew he was dying he drew out the treasure map and put it into Keating's hands.

"You have been the only one who ever proved to be my friend," his last words were, "and I want you alone to have this. Guard it carefully; never leave it out of your hands; trust no one, not even when you have the treasure in your possession—until you have safely landed it at home. I would have had it long ago if Providence hadn't decided I wasn't to profit from my sins. Your record is clear. If you succeed set aside a little bit for a mass now and then for Bill Thompson."

Thus passed away the last of the ship's company that had sailed away from the harbor fort at Callao in 1820 with those treasure chests in which were stored gold and silver, church ornaments and private jewels to the value of $150,000,000—last of the witnesses of that slaughter on the Cocos Island beach and the last link between this great treasure and its hiding place

Only the map was left—with the careful verbal instructions which Thompson gave his friend Keating to help him in his search. And Keating remembered well those last words of his pirate friend, "Show it to no one—trust no one—until you have the treasure safe at home."

But Keating talked at length with Captain Bogue when the latter returned to the fishing village. The captain had interested a rich merchant of Ottawa. This merchant had agreed to furnish the necessary funds if the captain could make arrangements for a ship to take their searchers to the island, and this the captain had done. Now Keating and Bogue went to the island, found the treasure and how Keating, leaving the captain dead on the beach, came away with his pockets filled with gold doubloons and a rich necklace, which still belongs to his relatives in Ottawa, will be told later on these pages.

Captain Bogue, during his short stay on the mainland arranging for the expedition, had visited the libraries, the government record offices and had talked with other sea captains who knew the South American seas, and had learned many things about Cocos Island which bore out the tales Thompson had told Keating of still other treasures buried there. He found hidden away in the marine records at Quebec a full account of many of the pirates whom Thompson had mentioned, particularly the history of Bonito Benito, most bloodthirsty of all the later day sea rogues, much of whose rich plunder, Thompson said, still is buried on this same island. Thompson's account Captain Bogue found fully borne out by the records and the tales of older captains who knew the traditions of the southern Pacific.

For more than two hundred years before the beginning of the nineteenth century and the burial of the government treasure on Cocos Island the waters on either side of the Isthmus of Panama were infested by pirates and buccaneers. Many tales are told of the redoubtable Sir Henry Morgan, the Scotchman, whose exploits on the Spanish Main so entranced Good Queen Bess that she knighted him, and of the Frenchman, Dampier, who warned his crew of cutthroats every time they boarded a Spanish galleon, "Remember, lads, dead men tell no tales," and of Sir Francis Drake, who never allowed his piracy to interfere with his claim to respectability.

Teach, the famous "Black Beard," flourished in these waters, too, as will be told later

The last of these ancient freebooters was Benito, and on a map the spot where he hid the treasure.

The historical record of the Peruvi government tows that Captain Morgan selected Cocos Island, off the ast of Panama, and that he buried the treasure and ade a map showing the exact location.

But Captain Morgan himself never returned from that oyage. The cupidity of a part of the crew was aroused y the sight of this magnificent treasure. They mutinied, illed all the officers, and the map fell into the hands of scoundrel named Thompson.

The original map made for the unfortunate Captain Morgan, which was taken from his dead body by the murderous mutineer Trompson, is now said to have fallen into the hands of a party of New Yorkers, who have quietly outfitted an expedition and are on their way to Cocos Island to dig in the spot indicated on Morgan's map.

But even if the treasure seekers really have Captain Morgan's map, it is not at all certain that they can locate the buried millions, because the directions require that a little river emptying into the sea be followed a certain distance to a certain spot. Volcanic convulsions have shaken the island more than once and changed the river course. Will the treasure hunters be able to trace the old river bed, long since overgrown by the tropical jungle?

This is the treasure map famous by Robert Louis Stevenson's "Treasure Island," and the history of the various efforts to recover this treasure and the interference of pirates and mishaps of the many ill-fated expeditions make a fascinating and dramatic record, even more remarkable than Stevenson, the novelist, suspected when he wrote his masterpiece.

his treasure there is almost tangible evidence on the and, as Captain Bogue discovered. Benito, in 1815, became a terror to shipping in the neighborhood of the West Indies. Both England and Spain sent out frigates to hunt for him, but he avoided them all, his depredations extending from New York to Rio Janeiro. It was out from Florida that he sighted one day a British slave ship, the Lightning, in whose hold there was a cargo of human flesh destined to bondage in the Southern States. The slaver carried two full broadsides of naval guns, and her crew was well supplied with arms and ammunition, but the pirates bore down upon her at night and after a brief fight boarded her and cleared the decks.

Benito's ship was badly crippled, so he took possession of the slaver, a much larger and faster ship, and made the English crew walk the plank. The negroes in the hold he spared, putting them on board his own ship, with all sail set, not knowing Where they drifted, or if they were saved, is not known.

With his new ship, which he renamed the "Relampago," or "Lightning," he set out for "new seas to conquer." He rounded Cape Horn and commenced to play havoc along the Pacific shore as far north as Acapulco, in Mexico. There was but one Spanish man-o'-war on this coast, and the skill of Captain Benito was more than enough to baffle his countryman.

The wealth of the churches in Spanish America was fabulous in those days. In Chile, Peru and Ecuador there were great cathedrals and monasteries in which the priests had gathered great stores of relics of the Inca temples, golden trappings used for animal sacrifices, altars heavily encrusted with gold and silver and various vessels of precious metal which formed a part of the Inca rituals. In these churches, too, were rich ornaments which made each altar a veritable treasure store. Benito, although he carried with him his own priest and forced his crew of cutthroats to attend mass every sunrise on the deck of his pirate ship, did not allow his piety to interfere with his business. He preferred to sack a church to sinking a richly laden privateer.

When the cruise of the Relampago had reached Panama, where an especially rich treasure was found in an ancient monastery, the pirate crew, at sea now for more than a year, begged an opportunity to go ashore for a carouse. Benito agreed, and to each man was given such gain share of the accumulated plunder as he desired for the celebration ashore. It was agreed that but one city along the coast offered safe hospitality—Lima, the capital, which Callao was the seaport. This was then the principal city of South America, Mecca of European adventurers, feminine as well as male, fabled for the prettiness of its women and for its offerings of entertainment.

Disguising his ship as a harmless trader and his men as ordinary sailors, Benito boldly put into the harbor of Callao and anchored under the guns of the great fort. Their pockets bulging with gold, each pirate went ashore, the captain and his mates among them, fixing the rendezvous aboard the ship for seven days later.

These seven days were memorable in Lima. There are traditions yet, even though the old town has disappeared, of the recklessness with which this merry company of seamen threw gold right and left wherever there was a bottle of rum to be had or a pair of condescending feminine lips to kiss. The crew, it is said, remained drunk for the whole of the seven days, but not so Captain Benito and his chief mates. They spent their gold liberally, and seemed to drink as many toasts to black eyes as the rest, but they kept their heads level, with future business in mind.

On every hand Benito saw evidence of the richness of the Peruvian capital. He said his masses every morning in a different church, and between his responses noted the shining of gold and silver behind the altar rails. He walked the narrow streets at night, as if to peer about for glimpses of black mantillas hiding wide-awake senoritas in the overhanging balconies, but really that he might find the streets that led quickest and straightest to the water front in Callao.

Before the week was over Benito had made a plan that was a daring one—more daring, even, than that of the intrepid pirate Sir Henry Morgan, who, more than a century before, had captured the brave city of Panama and burned it to the ground.

He told his men about it when they rejoined the ship at the end of their seven days. He intended, he declared, to gather a fleet of ships about him, and with crews he could depend upon, rob not one, but all the churches in Lima, and a few private strong boxes as well. His men cheered the bold decision.

The Relampago then started out on a voyage of conscription. The first ship it met was a Spanish galleon, the Matanzas, which was bound from Spain with money to pay the troops stationed in Peru and Ecuador. Benito made this ship his prize, confiscated the pay chests and enlisted the crew in his bold venture. The two ships soon captured others, until, in a few months, Benito was the pirate captain of a fleet of sixteen vessels, with crews aggregating 1,200 men. Then the Relampago, leading the way, set sail for the harbor of Callao.

They landed a few miles down the coast on a moonless night. There was a quick, silent march upon Lima. Benito had given careful instructions. A separate party threaded its way through the lightless streets, each to a different church or home of a rich man. Two hours before dawn, as if at a signal, the looting began. Whoever opposed the pirates was cut to the ground. Three score of priests, the record runs, were slain during the first few minutes of the raid. Whole households of the rich were murdered. All citizens who rushed into the street at the sound of fighting were shot or hacked to death.

Benito had carefully arranged so that the majority of the plunder fell into the keeping of members of the crew of the Relampago. Consequently when the pirate fleet pulled its anchors the greater portion of the loot was on the "flagship." Benito deserted the other pirate crews, leaving them scant profits from the daring raid, and scorning his pledge to see that the division would be just.

Laden down with the gains of more than a year of constant pillage, Benito looked about for a place to store his treasure. He found lying in a latitude five degrees north of the Equator a lovely tropical island, where the forest was luxurious and where gushing streams sparkled down mountain sides. He found, too, a good anchorage, and after a few days of careful exploration was satisfied that this island was uninhabited, offering no inducements for colonization, being off the track of trading vessels.

Benito decided this would be an ideal place to cache the treasure. Thompson, who was even then sailing those seas, related to Keating during their confidences in the latter's cottage in Newfoundland, how he had talked afterward to one of the crew of the Relampago, and how this man, a Frenchman, Andre Chappelle, of whom much will be told later in these pages, had described to him how Benito disposed of his treasure chests.

In these chests, Chappelle told Thompson, there was gold and silver worth more than ten million dollars. There were fifteen of them.

Benito pushed his ship as far as it would go into the shallow waters of the harbor bay and then sent his crew to drag the chests ashore. The landing was made at a point where the waves had worn a narrow tunnel through a rocky headland, and up the side of this tunnel each chest was lifted by ropes to the high land above.

Here there was a great boulder. Benito marked off twenty paces due west and then another twenty paces north. Here was a giant tree, which had withstood the winds of centuries, and which promised to withstand the storms of many another year. In the shadow of this tree the pirates dug until they had made room for all the fifteen chests, five feet from the surface.

Two nights were spent ashore drinking the rum Benito served out to his men in celebration of the occasion, and then the Relampago sailed away to new adventures.

That was in the year 1813. Eighty-five years later, in 1903, Captain Richard Shrapnel, of the British navy, commander of H. M. S. Haughty, who had led an expedition to the island in search of the treasure of Peru, guided by a clue that had come down from Thompson's friend Keating, but without the map, came upon "a rock resting on an upland at the edge of a deep crevice, on the flat side of which had been cut in crude but clear characters, 'West XX North. Tree.' And just below this marking was carved the letter 'B.'"

Was that a marking made by Benito?

Had Captain Shrapnel known then the whole of Thompson's narrative to Keating would he have walked "west twenty paces, twenty paces north" to the old tree, or its stump, and, digging there, unearthed those twelve million dollars in pirate loot which Thompson said his friend Chappelle had told him Benito had buried at that spot?

Keating did not give much serious consideration to this part of Thompson's tale. He repeated it to various friends, however, and told it to Captain Bogue when the latter returned to Newfoundland to find Thompson dead. The detailed direction to Benito's cache was remembered years later when Captain Shrapnel reported finding those markings, with their signature "B," undoubtedly standing for Benito, carved on the rock "near the edge of a narrow crevice."

None has ever searched again for this rock. It will be sought, however, by the new adventurers, who now are almost ready to land on the island with what they believe to be Thompson's original map to the location of the lost treasure of Peru.

Of Benito little more is known. There is a record in Mexico of his arrival at the town of Acapulco, where there was much gold that had been removed from Mexico City to the coast that it might escape revolutionists then imperilling the capital. Benito is said to have captured all this gold by a trick and to have returned with it to Cocos Island, where he added it to the store already left there.

Prizes for the Most Graceful "Lady Smokers"

The Newest Feminine Competition in London Creates as Much Stir as the Recent Contest in Paris for the "Prettiest Back"

One of the Prize Winners in the Great London Competition at the Royal Agricultural Hall "For the Most Graceful Lady Smoker."

The Bold, Dashing, Traditional Spanish "Cigarette Girl" Style of Smoking a Cigarette So Well Exemplified by Miss Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen."

A Noted Parisian Actress's Conception of How to Handle a Cigarette with the Utmost Distinction.

Mrs. Benjamin S. Guinness, of English Birth but Now a Prominent New York Society Leader and Art Patron. A French Author Refers to the Aristocratic "Mrs. G." As the Only New York Society Woman Who Showed the Refinement of Wearing Gloves When Smoking.

AT the recent exposition at the Royal Agricultural Hall in London, called "The Tobacco Fair," a novelty was introduced which has attracted a good deal of attention in England. A series of prizes was offered for "the most graceful lady smokers."

In America it is still held by many old-fashioned people that it is more disgraceful than graceful for women to smoke

Prizes for the best dancer, the best card player, for the prettiest foot and the sleekerest waist are familiar in America. Recently in Paris a competition was conducted for the prettiest back, which led to some criticism because some of the contestants very generously insisted upon showing the judges even more of their charms than was strictly confined to the trunk

But to London belongs the distinction of the first prize competition for "lady smokers"

On this first occasion the competition was limited to cigarettes, but the apparent success of the innovation has led those interested in the enterprise already to consider plans for a much more elaborate prize competition at the next Tobacco Fair. It is proposed to broaden the scope of the competition to include women who can smoke cigars and handle a pipe. Three separate sets of prizes will be offered next time for the three classes—cigarette ladies, cigar ladies and pipe ladies. It is expected that this widening of the competition will make next year's event much more interesting than the competition which has just closed

For three days the smoking competition went on. Pretty girls, dignified middle aged women, venerable grandmothers, women of title, humble working girls were among the competitors

The Royal Agricultural Hall is the place where the great cattle shows and horse shows as well as many other shows pertaining to country life are held in London. As the greatest families in the British aristocracy are interested in stock raising, it is often the scene of very fashionable gatherings, but never was there a better dressed or livelier crowd than those who watched "the graceful lady smokers"

Every woman at the show was invited to enter, and every competitor had ten minutes in which to display her grace. There was a magnificently decorated smoking room with Oriental draperies and every comfort that would assist in the enjoyment of a smoke.

Against the walls of the room stood a row of luxurious arm chairs which invited one to sit back and enjoy the delights of tobacco. In front of the chairs were tables piled with most inviting and fragrant boxes of every kind of cigarette known to civilization

The judges consisted of twelve men and women, some prominent in society and others interested in the tobacco industry.

Each competitor selected a box of her favorite cigarettes, sat down in an arm chair, lighted up and the test began.

If she sputtered if she made a face, if she smoked furiously, if she let her cigarette go out, if she coughed, if she felt sick, if she cried, if she did any one of a hundred ungraceful things she was counted out of the running as a prize winner

There is the "Carmen" way of smoking a cigarette, which is thrilling if rather plebeian and there is the Queen of Spain's way, which is majestic, and there are a hundred other ways more or less elegant of doing it. All of them were displayed for the benefit of the public at this show.

There were three principal prizes and six smaller ones. The first prize was a pearl necklace, the second a gold cigarette case adorned with diamonds and rubies; the third an exquisite cigarette holder of amber and gold. The other prizes consisted of cigarette cases and cigarette holders of less value

The names of the fair competitors were not given to the judges, in order that favoritism might be eliminated as far as possible. It was learned, however, that the winner of the first prize was a well known woman of title, while the second prize was taken by a salesgirl from a big London department store, who had just dropped in at the exposition in the evening

In announcing the awards the chief judge said:

"This delightful competition has proved to us beyond question that Englishwomen now know how to get the most out of a cigarette. Before the war we should not have been able to witness anything like this. Then a girl smoked a cigarette as though she were defying Providence

"To-day we are happy to say that Englishwomen can smoke as well as any women in the world—as well as Russian women at their best.

"The great amount of talent displayed by our visitors has made the task of judging a difficult and delicate one, but it has also been a very delightful one. At the same time we, as promoters of this test, feel that we have rendered a valuable service to society

"The result of this competition, we hope, will be to teach all women that it is worth while to strive to become perfect smokers. It is an art in itself—an art worthy of earnest study. She who has mastered the art will be repaid by finding in tobacco the most delightful relaxation for her leisure hours and the best friend in all troubles. The art will teach her to economize her cigarettes while getting the greatest enjoyment out of them."

The three chief prizes were awarded on the following grounds:

First Prize—For displaying perfect grace, while getting the utmost enjoyment out of her cigarette. This contestant smoked slowly and gracefully and inhaled the smoke with an entranced and satisfied expression. The manner in which she held herself, her happy contemplative expression, the easy grace of her gesture testified unmistakably that she was deriving the utmost enjoyment from her cigarette. Moreover, she blew perfect smoke rings

Second Prize—Awarded for exhibiting exquisite daintiness as well as perfect grace in handling her cigarette. This contestant put on spotless white gloves before starting to smoke, a very dainty practice which prevents the tobacco from staining the fingers or leaving an odor upon them. This contestant handled her cigarette with irreproachable grace. It was only in the matter of prolonged inhalation that she could be held to fall in the least behind the first prize winner

Third Prize—Awarded for using a cigarette-holder with the most perfect distinction. This method of smoking represents a high degree of elegance, as it avoids staining the fingers and prevents particles of tobacco of reaching the tongue. It also gives an opportunity for the display of a beautiful and richly decorated holder. The manipulation of the cigarette in its holder calls for grace, dignity, chic and distinction. The winning contestant met all these requirements in an admirable manner.

This exhibition has revealed to the male world that the female art of cigarette smoking is a very elaborate and difficult one. A man smokes for the flavor of the tobacco smoke, or simply for sociability. To the woman the method of doing it is about 50 per cent of the enjoyment.

It is only possible to suggest a few of the rules of the art as they have been laid down by an expert. In the first place the cigarette must be lighted with exquisite grace and daintiness. You should always hold the cigarette between the first and middle finger, which permits a free and graceful gesture. You should never hold it with the thumb and forefinger, which produces a stiff and awkward attitude

"Do not look at the cigarette as though you were afraid of it before you put it to your lips," says the British expert. "Put it to your lips in a negligent manner without looking at it and as if you were doing the most natural thing in the world.

"Inhale the smoke if you have found you can do it successfully after practising in private. This is the way to derive the highest joy from a cigarette. But if it makes you cough or cry, give up inhaling before you disturb a social gathering with your awkwardness."

The woman smoker is advised to smoke slowly and gently, not puffing violently and nervously. When she has learned all the dainty feminine ways that should go with the cigarette she may study blowing rings, which is a very high accomplishment that only a limited number of men have mastered

Such are the outlines of the womanly art of cigarette smoking as understood in England

The cigarette appears to have conquered all classes of European women from the highest to the lowest. England and France were the last countries where much prejudice lingered against the smoking woman. In England it was once thought a bit "shocking," as it still is in large parts of America, while in France it was considered as detracting a little from that daintiness which is the first essential of French womanhood. All these prejudices now seem to have been dropped under recent conditions.

Even good Queen Mary, the most distinguished conservative in England, now enjoys the weed in a quiet way, it is reported. This statement was recently made in a very well informed women's publication, and it is believed the Queen has no objection to the fact being known. At one time she certainly frowned on the habit.

The Queen is now satisfied that nothing will relieve nerve strain like tobacco, and she believes that many women could not have remained sane during the terrible ordeals of the war without it

How many American women can be regarded as really accomplished cigarette smokers? Would our women have captured the prizes if they had entered the contest in London's Royal Agricultural Hall?

It seems that even in those circles where smoking is customary American women have a great deal to learn. Madame Blanche Yorska, a talented Parisian actress, who recently passed several seasons in New York and had opportunities to meet fashionable society, makes this interesting remark in a newly published book:

"I dined with Mrs. G—— soon after my arrival in New York. This aristocratic and charming English lady always puts on white gloves before she smokes. This is a small detail, but in my opinion it placed her apart from all the other women guests who from the moment the hors d'oeuvres were served smoked one cigarette after another incessantly throughout dinner. I cannot understand why women should allow their pretty hands to smell of tobacco for a whole evening."

The reference to "Mrs. G——" apparently points to Mrs. Benjamin Guinness, who, although an Englishwoman, has been a prominent member of New York fashionable society for several years. Her husband belongs to a noble British family that is noted for making a rich dark beverage. Mrs. Guinness is famous for her jewels and for giving entertainments of a very original and interesting kind. She has been a generous patron of art and the drama, both American and foreign, and a visiting French actress would probably find her way to her home.

The little paragraph serves to call attention to the fact that many European women of elegance consider it indispensable to put on gloves before smoking. The custom is even more generally observed in French than in English society. Many American women apparently prefer to smoke without gloves.

Other women use cigarette-holders as a means of avoiding tobacco stain on their fingers. New York women, as observed at the fashionable restaurants, show a marked fondness for gorgeous cigarette holders of amber and gold, amber and platinum and other costly materials

New York undoubtedly has some society women who would bear comparison favorably with European women as smokers of distinction. A few months ago a very fashionable wedding occurred in the New York sporting set. Miss Edith Mortimer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Mortimer, was united to Count de Zoppola. While the wedding party was waiting outside the suburban church one of the charming bridesmaids, Miss Leonie Burrill, lighted a cigarette

The episode aroused some excitement among the plebeian curiosity-seekers who had come to look at the wedding, but none among the really fashionable. Miss Burrill knew how to smoke a cigarette properly, and her graceful performance excited only admiration among the initiated. If it received any attention at all.

The Young Wonder—A One-Act Play by Eugene Pillot

(Stage Rights Reserved by the Author and Play Must Not Be Produced Without His Written Consent.)

The room is in green and gold in a modern New York mansion. There is a door on each side and near the centre is a divan, a woman's fame-colored opera cloak thrown carelessly over it. The place is brilliantly lighted and deserted until MAURICE CLAUDRAIN hurries in—a handsome man, slight, and apparently very young. He pauses to make a quick survey of the room, sees the door opposite, and casually exclaims:

CLAUDRAIN: Ah, that door will get me out!

(As he starts toward the door it opens and SONIA sweeps into the room. She is a tall, dark type, very much older in appearance than CLAUDRAIN, but still good-looking and atmospheric in an evening gown of shimmering white and pearl. The moment she sees CLAUDRAIN she bursts with joy at the surprise of the meeting, and holds out both hands to him.)

SONIA: Maurice!

CLAUDRAIN: (Surprised, but somewhat annoyed): Ah, yes, Sonia, I'm glad to see you, but I'm just—

SONIA (Moving nearer and stretching her arms to him): To find you here—and alone, Maurice!

CLAUDRAIN (Coldly, for he is eager to be rid of her.): Yes I'll shake your hand. (One of them will do, I guess.

SONIA: My hand? Never! My arms for you, dear—for the great Claudrain!

CLAUDRAIN (Indifferently): Thanks, Sonia, but I'm just slipping away from an appreciative audience in the other room. I left the Honising to the violinist following me on the programme. Give him your arms. That door will surely get me out. (He starts to go, but she stops him.)

SONIA (Fiercely): Maurice. Maurice!

CLAUDRAIN: Yes, that's my first name. It's not a hard one to remember. (Again he tries to go, but she bars his way.)

SONIA: Do you think you can pass me up like this? After all we were to each other? No, I will not have it so!

CLAUDRAIN: But you can't expect me to thank you for remembering that we had a love affair twenty years ago

SONIA: Why not?

CLAUDRAIN: It's so ordinary. Any woman can remember a love affair. Impossible to make them forget. (He again starts to go, but she will not let him.)

SONIA: But you must stop a minute with me, Maurice, you must!

CLAUDRAIN: Please, not now, Sonia.

SONIA: Yes!

CLAUDRAIN: But I told you I slipped away as soon as I finished my lecture—to escape the hero-worshippers in there

SONIA: But you can't escape me, Maurice—not when we haven't seen each other for twenty years. For I was the first one of them all to love you! I was; you know I was!

CLAUDRAIN: Yes, but somebody had to be the first.

SONIA (She disregards his cut): And through all those years I've watched the papers herald your fame, Claudrain dear

CLAUDRAIN: You're not only a woman with an unforgivable memory, you have an unforgivable laugh.

SONIA: You can't mean that. Why, when your little poems of one night and love and laughter began appearing in magazines everywhere, and the critics declaring that you were a genius, one of the comic great men, time and again I said to myself: I inspired those poems, I inspired them!

CLAUDRAIN: But you didn't. A picture of Whistler's in the British Museum inspired them. No woman had anything to do with them

SONIA: How like you not to credit woman for helping you, now that you're great

CLAUDRAIN: It isn't necessary to credit woman for having a share in a man's success. She invariably appropriates it anyhow

SONIA: Nevertheless, but for a woman like me you couldn't have stepped from moonlight poems to the writing of marvelous plays and novels until now you're greater than Maeterlinck, Dunsany, Ibanez, and

CLAUDRAIN: And all the rest, like myself, that have run to America, the moment the war is over, to lap up any cream the pussyfoots might be holding up in their pretty

SONIA: A nice way to talk after Mrs. Von Glutton has brought together such a brilliant audience for you in her own drawing room. And as soon as that violinist gets through playing and they find that you have escaped, what will they say?

CLAUDRAIN: Oh, no doubt that Maurice Claudrain has gone to meet some woman. Isn't that what they usually say when a man hurries away from a stupid party?

SONIA: Perhaps—and truly Woman is always man's refuge and inspiration. How well I know that it's a woman that inspires every great work—woman.

CLAUDRAIN: Strange. And yet God managed to put together such a beautiful world before there were any women around to make suggestions.

SONIA: God was very unfortunate, but you had me in the beginning, dear. But why under heaven are we discussing the ways and wherefores of creation, when you should be kissing me? Come, dear! (Invitingly, she moves nearer him.)

CLAUDRAIN (Edging away): Er—why should I be kissing you? I see no reason for it at all.

SONIA: Because I am so proud of you and all you have done.

CLAUDRAIN: But—but——

SONIA: And for old times' sake, dear.

(As her fingers start to play up his arm, he pulls away.)

CLAUDRAIN: Sonia, this demonstration is unusual for me. I feared that if I stopped to speak with you this would happen. And there is no earthly reason for it. True, we had an affair—and girl love affair twenty years ago——

SONIA (Still revelling in it): Oh the Roman nights, don't you remember it? Beneath a Spring moon so very white that it hurt, and everywhere the perfume of roses and the songs of serenaders gliding over dark waters—a-ah! No wonder you wrote poems of moonlight and love and laughter.

CLAUDRAIN: I wish I hadn't. Now look here. That romance was closed very soon after it opened. I returned to England and you remained on the continent.

"Certainly not! No man ever escaped from a woman by running away from her. The only way is to kill her."

SONIA: With only the channel between us. And yet we never saw each other again

CLAUDRAIN: Well you married. I was it you married then?

SONIA: Oh dear, you can't expect me to remember. I've been married so much since CLAUDRAIN: Indeed? How many times?

SONIA: Oh, six or eight. But I'm alone, lonely free now. (Thinking that she may have desperate designs on him, he sneaks toward the door, but she catches him by the arm.) Surely you don't think you can escape from a woman by running away from her?

CLAUDRAIN: Certainly not. No man ever escaped from a woman by running away from her. The only way is to kill her

SONIA: You're not half so cynical as you would have people believe. Come and sit down here with me. Yes, I insist. (Resigned, he sits near her on the divan.) I'm quite independent financially now

CLAUDRAIN: (Edging away a little): Indeed?

SONIA: Yes, through several alimonies and one or two deaths. I'm glad to say.

CLAUDRAIN: That's right. I did hear once that you were notorious for stealing attractive men from their wives and sweethearts. But I scarcely believed it.

SONIA: You should have. It's a passion with me, my dear

CLAUDRAIN: You mean——

SONIA: That unless I can steal a man from another woman, he doesn't interest me.

CLAUDRAIN: Then what do you want with me?

SONIA: Your career has made you blunt, Maurice. I remember well when you were more subtle.

CLAUDRAIN: Yes, but then I was more ignorant.

SONIA: Still I have not said I wanted anything.

CLAUDRAIN: Perhaps not in words, but no woman meets a man with open arms, after all this time, unless she wants something from him. What is it?

SONIA: Maybe—to kiss you

CLAUDRAIN: If that were all, you would have accomplished it by this time. You want to know something. What is it?

SONIA: Well, three things.

CLAUDRAIN (Wearily): Name the first.

SONIA: The first is—well, the world calls you "The young wonder" They say you are a youth just stepping into the bloom of life. And yet you have produced some of the most brilliant literary work of the age. I know, for I've read some of it—with difficulty, I'll admit, but still I've read it. But the point is—you aren't really young; surely you are as old as I am. And yet you don't look a day older than you did twenty years ago.

CLAUDRAIN: Ah, and you want to know the secret?

SONIA: Yes. What have you done to keep young the way you have?

CLAUDRAIN: Useless to tell you, Sonia. No woman could use the same method.

SONIA: You can't get out of telling me as easily as all that,

CLAUDRAIN: But she couldn't.

SONIA: How do you know?

CLAUDRAIN: Because you yourself have proved that they can't

SONIA: I?

CLAUDRAIN: Certainly Dozens of times

SONIA: I don't care. I want to know anyhow. Tell me

CLAUDRAIN: But you wouldn't believe me, if I did tell you

SONIA: Oh, yes I would. Any woman who is losing youth is willing to believe anything that might save it for her. You see I'm quite frank with you. Now tell me. Has have you done it?

CLAUDRAIN: By always forgetting and never repeating

SONIA: How can one always forget and never repeat? Ones society existence is a repeating of day-and nights and experiences.

CLAUDRAIN: So age thinks, but youth will never tell you so

SONIA: Youth is stupid

CLAUDRAIN: But it's youth!

SONIA: Please explain. I don't understand all this.

CLAUDRAIN: It's all so simple, Sonia, that it's difficult to explain. Anyway, by not repeating I mean that for years I have refused to repeat any experience; and if it has forced itself upon me, I have refused to think of it as a repeater. Now there's the simple problem of getting out of bed every morning. Most people emerge from the corners with the same foot on the same side of the bed, year after year as regular as clockwork. No wonder they get set and old and grumpy. But not so with me.

SONIA: What do you do when you get up?

CLAUDRAIN: Oh, sometimes I leap over the foot of the bed; sometimes over the head and other times I just roll out and scamper across the floor like a kid. And, of course, I am a kid. I shall never be anything else. It's so much fun!

SONIA: I can scarcely believe that it's the great Claudrain that's telling me such nonsense.

CLAUDRAIN: Of course you can't. Women are creatures of repetition. They'd die if they couldn't repeat their petty love affairs. Or remind themselves of their lost joys and wished-for sorrows that they know they never can possibly have.

SONIA: That is untrue.

CLAUDRAIN: Indeed? And yet only a moment ago you insisted on remembering that our romance of twenty years ago had not yet been washed away by those infernal Italian waters. You have an overendowment of remembering and repeating, it seems to me.

SONIA: You're incorrigible. How old are you, anyway?

CLAUDRAIN: I've forgotten.

SONIA: How like a woman that is.

CLAUDRAIN: Yes, to ask the question. But quite like a man to forget the answer.

SONIA: I will not permit my Maurice to speak to me like this one minute more. I will not! Forgetting and repeating is after all nothing to us, dear. The past is nothing—poof, we'll blow it away! Now come tell me how glad you are to find my arms waiting when you have reached the hill-top of life, here we can both be young together—both! (Her arms are been stealing across his shoulder, but he moves away when he notices it.)

CLAUDRAIN: Wait for that until you have asked the other two questions.

SONIA: Perhaps I have forgotten them.

CLAUDRAIN: No, you haven't. No woman forgets anything that she wants to find out. What's the second question?

SONIA: Well—are you—married?

CLAUDRAIN: Do you think I could have remained young if I were?

SONIA: That's ambiguous. You may be only recently married Who was the little blonde woman that came in with you to-night and helped you off with your coat?

CLAUDRAIN: (Carelessly): Someone interested in me.

SONIA (Quick to get on a scent): Oh! So that's it.

CLAUDRAIN: I haven't said so.

SONIA: Then why don't you say something definite?

CLAUDRAIN: Because the surest way to lose a woman is to be explicit with her.

SONIA: Ah, then you don't want to lose me? You're just been pretending all along. You haven't seen your real self with me

CLAUDRAIN: Real people are always themselves. Only to unreal ones have to pose.

SONIA: A pretty speech, but superficial.

CLAUDRAIN: So is life

SONIA: Not when you and I are together. It's the reality of "omance itself.

CLAUDRAIN: Very poor logic, Sonia. Romance is a myth, and a myth has no reality.

SONIA: But our romance is very real, dear, very real!

CLAUDRAIN: Believe that if it gives you pleasure. But ask the next question and let me go, please?

SONIA: Don't be in a hurry. You weren't on those Italian seas when the Spring moon was so white it——

CLAUDRAIN (Tartly): Yes, I know the moon was white.

SONIA: And the perfume of the roses everywhere and——

CLAUDRAIN (Growing angry): Yes, I smelt them!

SONIA: And the songs of serenaders over dark waters, and you beside me pleading for a love that would never——

CLAUDRAIN (In despair): Only one thing will stop such a phonographic woman! Sonia, come here. (Savagely he folds her into his arms and crushes her lips with a kiss.), There! (Then he would release the embrace, but she holds him close.)

SONIA (With great emotion): The answer to my third question before I even asked it. How beautiful! I wanted you to kiss me, dear.

CLAUDRAIN (Breaking away from her): Good night!

SONIA: Where are you going?

CLAUDRAIN: To join my sister, waiting for me in the motor.

SONIA (Aghast): The blonde woman?

CLAUDRAIN: Yes.

SONIA: Is that the truth?

CLAUDRAIN: Absolutely.

SONIA (With great disgust): My God! And I thought I was stealing you from another woman. Your fame has made you positively respectable.

CLAUDRAIN: But it has kept me young! (He laughs and runs out the door, leaving SONIA staring after him. She gathers up her cloak from the divan and throws it about her.)

SONIA: Youth? What's it worth if you've forgotten how to use it, stupid? And yet—I wonder if that blonde woman really is his sister. (But it is too late now to consider that, for he has found his cloak. So she shrugs her shoulders and goes out the opposite door to join the other hero-worshippers in the drawing room across the hall.)

THE GATES OF HOPE

By Anthony Carlyle

(Cont'd from Last Sunday)

CHAPTER XVII.

UPON her words, suddenly, startlingly, unexpectedly passionate, there followed a little, throbbing silence. Over it rose the poignant sweetness of some bird's song in the garden. Rosslaer could feel the warmth of Araby's breast, the beat of her heart against his cheek.

For a long moment they stood thus; then the girl drew herself out of his hold gently. With a light hand upon his arm she drew him to the window.

Her eyes were a little dewey when she looked up at him again; her mouth tremulous. Impulsively Rosslaer bent and kissed it, passionately yet with a new, lingering tenderness.

"I'm not worth it!" he said again, huskily. "God knows, I'm not worth it!"

Araby, tilting her head back against his arm, laughed contentedly. Nevertheless her clear eyes searched his face intently and with something of question.

There were new lines in it, grim lines that had never been there before and which made it seem much older. The gay boyishness had fled. The ready laughter no longer lurked in his eyes. There was something of brooding of weariness in his whole expression that perplexed and vaguely disturbed her. After a minute she said, gently:

"Are things still going wrong for you, Kemp?" And was amazed at the sudden violence in his voice when he answered her.

"Damnably wrong!" He freed himself from her hold and went nearer the window, staring out with sombre gaze. Never had what he done seemed more monstrous in his eyes than it did now.

Still ashrill and tingling with passion for Araby, the insidious, persistent thought of Marcia remembrance of her. She loomed like a pale ghost in the background of his mind, haunting him.

Araby slid soft fingers into his.

"Still—money?" she asked a little wistfully; and Kempton roused himself with an effort. During the last week he had forgotten money matters completely. His financial difficulties had never seemed of less importance. Now he jerked his memory back to them and smiled grimly.

"Only money?" Araby persisted, and he looked at her sharply. A sudden dread of rousing any sort of suspicion in her mind assailed him. He answered with hurried emphasis.

"Only money." And added, half against his will: "Why?"

"I only wondered. I've never seen you look quite as you look today, Kempton. Almost ill—and so tired. I thought perhaps some thing else might be troubling you."

He stirred uneasily but she clung to him. His troubled face was very expressive at the moment.

"You'll always tell me, Kemp, won't you? I mean if anything really serious should happen? I can't bear to think of your being shut away from your worries. I want to share them, to help you bear whatever burden comes along——"

Her voice trailed into silence, and Kempton turned away his face. He did not answer her plea. He could not. In all innocence she had dealt him another stab and he groaned inwardly. Then, suddenly with something of the old boyish impulsiveness he dropped to his knees beside her, resting his head once more against her breast.

"Oh, Araby!" he whispered. "I've wondered sometimes, just lately, if you were not right in what you hinted the other day—that I was wrong, utterly damnably wrong in persuading you to give yourself to me. I'd no right to do it! I ought never to have married you if I could not do it properly. I ought not to have married you at all since I could offer you nothing that a husband should bring to his wife—neither support, a place by his side, nor his name!"

She uttered a little, distressed exclamation, but he went on unheeding, in a rush of bitter self-accusation:

"I was a cad. There was no excuse, Araby. I see it now; see it more clearly every day! Not even the excuse that I was mad with love of you, with longing for you——"

"Hush!" She laid her fingers abruptly over his lips. "You must not abuse yourself any more, or we shall quarrel." For the rest, if there is blame there is blame for us both. And—we can't undo what is done, you know!"

She spoke lightly with a sudden irrepressible gaiety, as though the knowledge brought her more than a little of content. Kempton raised his head slowly and looked at her. His lips twitched for a moment; there was a new, brooding shadow in his eyes as he answered her, echoing her words.

"No. We can't undo it. We never can undo what we have done—even when we want to. That which we have written of our own will endures—be it for good or for ill!"

CHAPTER XVIII.

BUT he was thinking of Marcia as he spoke, not of that sweet madness which, unheeding and uncaring of the future, had swept them off their feet and finally made them one.

The bitterness in his voice frightened Araby. He saw the hurt in her eyes and caught her close; but could find him away.

Would you undo it?" she asked Kempton stopped her mouth with kisses.

"I love you!" he cried, unsatisfactorily. And then, in desperation. For heaven's sake, let's talk of something else!"

She lay still for a minute, eyes closed under his kisses, the old content creeping over her. Then she sat upright, ruffled her bright head with long slim fingers, and laughed at him under gold-tipped dark lashes.

"Very well. What shall we talk about? There is so much—you seem not to have come near me for a year instead of just a week—and there's a whole pile of more or less exciting things to tell you.

"There's been quite a round of gaiety this week; I've been to one or other of the studios four nights running and out to dinner once at the beginning of the week with dad. He sold his latest picture and we celebrated accordingly. I think it was pretty good—the picture, I mean—but I wouldn't like to be altogether sure.

"You see, Jasper Waldron bought it, and I shouldn't imagine he's much of an art critic. Besides, he's such a dear that it would be rather difficult to exactly determine his motives. And, oh, Kemp! What do you think? I solemnly believe he's falling in love!"

Kempton fished for his cigarette case and held it out to her.

"Good heavens! Your father," he demanded, and the girl broke into a little gurgling laugh.

"You goose! Not but what he's really quite silly enough and nearly young enough if only he'd have his hair cut and shave his beard! No—I mean Jasper Waldron!"

"Never!" There was a real interest in Kempton's voice. His eyes questioned, and, lighting her cigarette, nodded.

"I really do think so! And with the prettiest girl. We've only known her a week, but she's one of those who sort of get you right away. We're friends already and Jasper Waldron's obviously smitten. I can't say I wonder at it. She's got beauty and personality and charm as well. Her name's Marcia Halstead."

CHAPTER XIX.

KEMPTON gave an uncontrollable start. Her announcement momentarily took his breath away, filled him with an amazed dismay. Araby paused in her narrative to look at him inquiringly.

"Do you know her?"

The man nodded. He was fumbling with his cigarette case again with fingers that were not altogether steady. His face was a little averted, his lips compressed.

He was profoundly disturbed, but with an immense effort he forced himself to answer her naturally.

"Yes. I met her once or twice at Audrey Alden's flat in Arlisa Mansions. She is Mrs. Alden's secretary, isn't she?"

"She was. Oh, Kemp! Life really is like a fairy story for some people. This girl—Marcia—is one of them. She was quite poor. She was a real struggle for her, and she has a delicate mother. And then, only a few days ago, she learned that some relation had left her, literally, a fortune! I'm awfully glad. She really is a dear; and, when you get to know her, so much more girlish and human than she at first appears. Just at present she's like a child let loose in a toy-shop! And she's having the time of her life. I've been with her shopping once or twice already!"

She broke off with a little gurgle of reminiscence. Rosslaer groaned inwardly and stirred uneasily. Then he made his bid with a trifle.

"Rather a sudden friendship, isn't it?" he drawled. "You're not generally so prodigal of your favours, Araby."

The girl laughed and lifted her slim shoulders in a little idle shrug.

"I suppose it is. But as I have already said, Marcia is a woman with a personality—as well as being a positive peach where looks are concerned—and one is quite remarkably drawn to her almost at once. At least, I was—and I'm quite sure Jasper was, too! Anyway, he's managed to turn up at quite a lot of places where she has been this week.

"I took her to that affair at Jim Fldridge's—when Con Wilde exhibited his pictures. She didn't seem to want to come at first, but changed her mind. Of course, Jasper Waldron was there and paid her an awful lot of attention. Quite took it upon himself to show her the ropes and initiate her into the customs of Bohemia, as it were. And I must say she seemed to enjoy herself immensely."

Rosslaer, puffing at a cigarette, did not answer. His feeling of dismay was increasing. Araby spoke of the other girl as of one for whom she had formed a lasting friendship. The fact that these two women, of all others, should be instantaneously attracted to each other was as strange as their meeting had been.

Don't you think she's pretty?" She started as Araby's voice broke upon his uneasy thoughts, and a little flush passed over his face for an instant.

"Why, I've never thought about it! Yes; I suppose she is in a rather insignificant sort of way."

"Insignificant! My dear Kemp! Oh, but I was forgetting! You knew her only as a serge-skirted shirt-waisted, smooth-haired person with a writing block and pencil in her hand! She isn't like that now. I can assure you! Even in these few days the transformation is complete. She's been buying clothes—wonderful clothes! And hats!"

She paused to draw a little envious breath, and a sudden deeper shadow crossed Rosslaer's face. His glance took in the plain white cotton blouse, the plainer, rather shabby skirt, and his lips twitched. She went on eagerly:

"Such hats! And she looks perfectly lovely in them all. And then she has been running about and amusing herself—and eating at all the best restaurants—and having altogether a good time. She was such a pale, thin thing before, wasn't she? But she's got a color now, and her eyes are quite different—bright and easier—almost feverish sometimes. But you don't seem a bit interested!"

Rosslaer made a quick movement of his hand.

"Why should I be? There's only one woman who interests me, sweetheart!"

She laughed again, tenderly, and catching his arm to her rubbed her smooth cheek against his sleeve.

"You dear! But you will be interested—or, at any rate, surprised—when you meet her again. You will hardly believe she's the same girl!"

"It's quite unlikely that I shall meet her!"

He spoke so sharply that she looked at him in momentary wonderment. The cigarette between his lips was unlighted, his hands were thrust deep into his pockets.

Louise Glaum, the Famous Actress, Says:

"Show Me a Homely Girl or Woman and I'll Show You a Neglected Complexion"

"The girl or woman who is passed by without a glance of admiration has only herself to blame," says Louise Glaum, the beautiful actress now starring in the J. Parker Reed, Jr., productions. Through following the simple combination given below it is now possible for every girl and woman to have an attractive, rosy-white, beautiful complexion, free from freckles, wrinkles, blackheads, pimples, coarse or large pores, tan, dark skin, sallowness or roughness. A few minutes night and morning is all the time required.

Just follow the advice of Louise Glaum and the wonderful effect of this simple combination will please and surprise you. This method may be used without the least fear of harmful results, as it will not produce or stimulate a growth of hair. Here is the formula: Get at any grocery store and get 10 cents worth of ordinal (sometimes called simply orinal) powder. Then at any drug store a bottle of Rexall Lemon Blossom Cream. Some women with a hard to get a good rich cream (it takes 1 Cream 1 have found the best results by adding a little of the ordinal to a bar made of cream. Advice from Mary T. Goldman

IT introduces you to the safe, sure, scientific way to restore gray hair, discovered by me over 50 years ago. It both proves results and protects you from imitators who make the same claims but can't do the work.

The restoration of gray hair is a serious matter. Learn how to restore your hair safely and surely without danger of disfiguring streaks and discoloration.

Perfected to Restore My Own Gray Hair

The original Mary T Goldman's Hair Color Restorer was not made to sell. I worked on the problem and perfected the formula to restore my own gray hair.

I would not dye and I was not willing to turn prematurely white so I set myself to find a remedy.

What Mary T. Goldman's Is

Simply a clean pure colorless liquid which you comb in. It, from water, applied by combing through the hair. You don't have to depend on hair dressers or take your friends into the secret. The restoration is gradual and won't attract attention.

Only four to eight days of treatment are required—days through which you watch a transformation. Little by little the gray disappears and the natural color returns. You need never have a gray hair—not at any age.

Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer doesn't interfere with shampooing, there is nothing to wash off or rub off. It keeps the hair soft and fluffy, easy to curl and dress.

MAIL THIS COUPON For Free Trial Bottle

Fill out the coupon carefully—be sure to give the exact color of your natural hair. If possible, enclose a lock in your letter.

By return mail you will receive a trial size bottle and special application comb with full directions for the trial.

Use the trial bottle on a single lock of hair, watch the gray disappear and the natural color return.

When you know exactly what my hair color restorer will do, get a full size bottle from your druggist, or send direct to me. Don't accept anything else. There are no "just as goods"—you want Mary T. Goldman's.

I'll Teach You Piano In Quarter Usual Time

To persons who have not previously heard of my method, this may seem a pretty bold statement. But I will gladly convince you of its accuracy by referring you to any number of my graduates in any part of the world.

There isn't a state in the Union that doesn't contain many skilled players of the piano or organ who obtained their training from me by mail. I have far more students than were ever before taught by one man.

Investigate by writing for my 64-page free booklet "How to Learn Piano or Organ."

My way of teaching piano or organ is entirely different from all others. But in saving time, one hour is spent entirely away from the A-plated learning music is about Harmony and The Art of Music. This is an awful shock to most teachers (the "old school") who still teach that to attain piano is to study a system of "finger exercises." When you do go to the piano to play you are compelled to sit and struggle with the mechanical difficulties of the instrument, and you understand what you are playing. Within four lessons you will be able to play any interesting piece by note. Then will come the original work, but in all other studies as well.

I make use of every possible short cut and scientific principle, many of which are entirely unknown to the average teacher. The patented Brunswick Method, the COLORTONE, saves away all playing difficulties and makes troubled students for Beethoven and Wagner. Transposition, memorizing, "ear playing," etc., are all made easy by this wonderful invention. QUINN-LESSON Lists lead in a simple, hand separated counting picture of music, which enables you to see, right before your eyes, every movement of the hands at the keyboard. You actually see the fingers move. Instead of having to reproduce your teacher's finger movements from MEMORY—which can not always be accurate—you have the correct models before you during every minute of practice. The COLORTONES and QUINN-LESSON Lists are two of years of trained effort. They can be obtained only from me and there is nothing else, my system, remotely like them.

Men and women who have failed by other methods have quickly and easily attained success when studying with me. In all essential ways you are in closer touch with me than if you were study ng by the usual method. And my lessons cost you only 43 cents each—and they include all the music and everything else necessary for study. There is no "extra" in my method for studying in moderate or in advanced grades. Even the most elementary pieces is nothing before us any more than it is certain that your progress is at all times in accord with the best that is taught in the best schools and that means all the difference in the world.

Over 1,000 of the most distinguished musicians who would not recommend any course but the best—to beginners or experienced players—are my pupils. You advance as rapidly as you wish, and all necessary music is supplied without extra charge. A diploma is awarded. Write today, without cost or obligation, for 64 page free booklet, "How to Learn Piano or Organ."

The Story of an Heiress Under Sentence of Death

and there was the sharp line of a frown between his brows.

"I don't see that!" she exclaimed. "In fact, I should think you'd be more likely to meet her now than before. She was working then; now she is playing and going about everywhere. Mrs. Alden's taken her under her wing; and, then, she is interested in Bohemian circles, too" —

"But I thought she was going out of England!"

Rossiaer bit his lip sharply the instant he had uttered the words. He flushed again as he met Araby's surprised glance, and added quickly:

"I—I heard she'd had some good fortune, of course, though I didn't pay much attention at the time. And I imagined her intention was to go abroad."

His trailed to a stop. Araby nodded

"So it was. But she's changed her mind. She finds London much more fascinating than when she was poor! So she's taking a furnished flat—a duck of a place—and I believe she's going to stay at least a month or six weeks."

CHAPTER XX.

WHILE Araby, innocently unaware of Rossiaer's consternation, was idly informing him as regards Marcia's altered plans, Marcia herself was sitting at a little, gleaming, discreetly screened table in that same restaurant where first they had met opposite Jasper Waldron.

They were to join Mrs. Alden at the theatre after dinner. Waldron, meeting the girl that afternoon at Arliss Mansions, had asked both women to dine with him before the play. Audrey, to his not easily concealed relief, had pleaded a previous engagement. Marcia, after a flushed moment of hesitation, had accepted.

Glancing at him now from beneath her lowered lids she found it difficult to believe that she had first seen him one short week ago. She had met him frequently since; he seemed to turn up wherever she happened to be—at luncheon, tea or dinner. Sometimes they had seen each other as many as three times in one day.

For the girl had plunged immediately into that whirl of pleasure which her new estate made possible. The opportunity to enjoy herself at last was here; she made the most of it without hesitation.

She seemed possessed by a sort of feverish restlessness. There were times when her eyes were rather unnaturally bright, the color in her cheeks almost too vivid. But with each day her charm increased. Already her beauty had taken a softer bloom. Freedom from care, from anxiety and the need to work—change of society and surroundings—all these things had worked in an amazingly short time, a complete transformation in her.

The hollows in her cheeks had filled out; the pinched look at her nostrils was gone. Her warm, strangely brilliant smile was less rare. Strangely enough, she was neither shy nor awkward. She accepted the change in her fortunes quite naturally now; watching her, a casual observer would be inclined to imagine that she had been used to money and luxury all her life.

She was cultured; she possessed excellent taste, and her beauty was of that type which, while distinctive in itself, pays for adorning. She dressed perfectly; she chose her amusements and pastimes judiciously.

She [redacted] already exquisitely coiffed and admirably manicured. She took an almost vain and quite schoolgirlish pleasure in her toilet. She delighted nearly as much in buying perfumes and powders,

Araby laughed again, tenderly, and catching his arm to her rubbed her smooth cheek against his sleeve. "You dear!" she said. "But you will be interested—or, at any rate, surprised—when you meet her again. You will hardly believe she's the same girl!"

creams and lotions—all those little personal luxuries beloved of every woman of refinement—as she did in purchasing Paris hats and gowns and delectable lingerie.

For the rest, she was like a child freed from the gloomy confines of the schoolroom and let loose with unlimited money to spend and the world to play with.

Already, it seemed to Jasper Waldron, she was younger than on that first night he had met her. Then she had seemed a woman over-tired, over-worn. Now she was just a girl—a girl bubbling over with joy of life and gay, good spirits. The change was remarkable. It intrigued him; his interest in her deepened with every chance [redacted].

Even on that first night her eyes had haunted him. The memory of them, of her white face, had prompted him to send her the roses. They haunted him still. He found it increasingly difficult to put her out of his thoughts.

He felt toward her as he could not recollect having felt toward any other woman. There was something about her that set her apart from even the most charming. Something alluring in her personality—something, at times, in her eyes which he could not quite fathom, and which stirred in him a quite incomprehensible feeling of protective tenderness. They would become wistful sometimes, even in her gayest moment, with a wistfulness that took him by the throat; that almost hurt him.

But they were only eager to-night—eager and excited and bright with pleasure. She was looking about her with keen interest, her lips a trifle apart, and more than one quick, admiring glance was directed at her.

And certainly there was cause. She was one of the best-dressed women in the room; white arms and shoulders gleamed through the silvered meshes of her black gown, a big wrap-coat of rose and gold brocade and white fur fur lay over the back of her chair.

She was without ornament save for a quaint, uneven knob of rose quartz that swung by a narrow black ribbon from her slender throat, and a small, diamond-barred pin in the warm brown of her burnished hair.

Waldron, looking at her, aware of the attention she was attracting, was conscious of a little tingling sense of pleasure—and of something else to which he was not able to give a name.

As the waiter refilled their glasses and moved away Waldron leaned forward.

"Mrs. Alden tells me," he murmured, "that you've changed your mind about going abroad and have decided to take a flat here in town for a month or so?"

There was a question in his voice. Marcia brought her wandering glance back to his brown face and smiled at him.

"For six weeks, anyway," she acquiesced. "I had not meant to" He fancied for a moment that a shadow crossed her face. "I fully intended to take my mother right away as soon as my financial affairs were settled. But—but I find London is a far more fascinating place when one has money. And I feel I'd rather get used to my new good fortune where I am more or less at home. And the few friends I possess are here."

"Few?" Waldron's voice was skeptical; Marcia stirred her shoulders.

"I assure you they are not many," she said. "I haven't had much opportunity of making friends hitherto. At least, not the sort of friends I wanted. Of course, Mrs. Alden was always awfully kind, and her interest and sympathy in me now are as genuine as they are delightful to possess. It isn't every woman who'd be willing to play chaperone to her ex-secretary, you know"

Waldron nodded.

"Audrey's one of the best. I'm glad, for your sake, you count her among your friends. Is she one of the oldest?"

He was really interested—so interested that he was surprised at himself. Marcia flashed him a sudden glance that was not without wistfulness though it smiled.

"The only old one!" she assured him. "The—the other is quite new. I've only known her a week, but I like her more than I ever guessed I could like a girl of my own sex."

"Her!" There was something in his tone beneath the surprise so like disappointment that she flushed brightly. She answered rather hurriedly.

"Yes. Araby Trask. I—she is quite delightful, I"—— She paused

For some reason she felt confused. her color grew warm again beneath his eyes. She lifted her wineglass and set it down again.

He noted her confusion and was stirred again to that odd tenderness by it. She was so young—so completely unspoiled. He leaned forward impulsively.

"What about me?" he demanded reproachfully and with an earnestness in his tone that deepened the rose in her cheeks.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN WANTS TO KNOW

It is a recognized fact that fashions for women throughout the civilized world are created by their Parisian sisters. They spend less on their clothing yet possess a charm that is all their own. Attention to novelties and accessories is the secret. The latest sensation is the "Debutante" Mesh Bag in the torpedo shape. It has already supplanted the beaded bag and is being carried wherever good taste is shown. The "Debutante" is made of Armor Mesh heavily silver plated, has an invisible mirror, beautifully engraved top, jewel clasp and up-to-date chain handle. The Armor Mesh is so constructed and the light is reflected in such a manner that it sparkles and glistens beautifully. Wherever carried it causes a sensation and its owner is soon the envy of her friends. If you have not seen this wonderful bag, go to your jeweler and ask him to show you one. After seeing it you certainly would not be without this chic, snappy, up-to-date bag. If your dealer has not secured them as yet and you wish to carry one of these beautiful "Debutante" Armor Mesh Bags at once, we will accommodate you by sending one direct from our main factory. Send no money, simply send your name and address and we will forward you C. O. D. by registered mail one of the latest and handsomest creations in bags. On receipt of it pay the postman the small sum of $5.00. We are so sure it will please you that we guarantee to refund your money if you are not entirely satisfied. Fruit in Summer

By Mrs. Christine Frederick,
The Distinguished Authority on Household Efficiency.

GREAT changes have occurred in popular taste in the last decade or two, and plants and fruits that were once thought unfit for food have since come into great popular favor. Tomatoes, for example, formerly called "love apples," were considered poisonous and were raised only for the sake of the pretty appearance the ripe red fruit made when displayed as ornaments on the mantelpiece. Asparagus also was shunned as food and grown solely because of its beautiful foliage which was used to decorate the house.

Even to-day some people feel that fruit is a "luxury" and that it is an extravagance to spend for its extensive and free use on the table. It is a settled fact that in many rural communities there are still numbers of persons who never think of eating the delicious fruit growing about and on their own farms and woods. "Eat lettuce? Why, that's only grass for a cow!"

Now there is no question but what fruit is essential to a balanced diet. Fruit consists of two parts—the pithy or fibrous portion, which holds the juices, and the juices themselves, which contain the invisible but soluble mineral salts. Fruit as food has two functions—the fibrous portion acts as "bulk" to stimulate intestinal action, and the juices keep the blood pure and cool and lower and the acidity of the blood. No other food can fill these two functions so well. No matter how much meat and, starchy foods and bread and even green vegetables are taken the diet is unbalanced without fruit.

All fruits have a large percentage of water, which makes them cooling and refreshing. Their distinctive flavors greatly delight the appetite. The beneficial effects of fruit are more pronounced when they are taken raw, as cooking neutralizes the strength of the various acids. A pear, for example, or a dish of berries will have more results, both in refreshing and as a laxative, if not cooked.

Grapes contain a large percentage of sugar, potash, salts, phosphoric acid, lime and iron. They are blood builders.

Apples and pears contain malic acid, phosphates, lime, albumen. They possess valuable laxative qualities.

Cherries and plums contain phosphates, sugar and nitrogen.

Blackberries, raspberries, huckleberries and strawberries contain citric acid, salts of lime and iron. Like cherries and plums they are astringent and tonic.

Oranges contain a large percentage of sugar. They are blood making and laxative.

Pineapples contain a digestive juice related to pepsin that is excellent for catarrhal troubles.

Melons contain a large percentage of water in combination with sugar and starch. They are cooling and tonic.

In what is called a "natural diet" great quantities of fruit are eaten. There are two things to observe in eating fruit: First, to have it perfectly ripe and as mature as possible, and, second, not to mix it or eat it at the same time with the wrong food.

For example, a person who eats an underripe banana, which is nothing but a mass of raw starch, will say, "Oh, I can't eat bananas." Undoubtedly if they had eaten a banana so ripe that it was soft and the outside skin black it would have agreed with them.

Similarly someone will say, "I can't eat strawberries." Very probably they attempted to eat strawberries with sugar and with milk, two of the worst foods to eat at the same time with fruit. How can anyone expect an acid fruit and milk to go well together?

I am not surprised at the amount of heartburn prevalent when I see the way people combine a very acid fruit like grapefruit with cereal and milk in their stomachs. No wonder they feel a burning—who would not? Acid fruits should never be eaten with milk nor at the same time with starches.

Each person can experiment with his own results when eating certain fruits and learn to avoid wrong combinations. An entire "fruit breakfast" is a refreshing plan in hot weather. In biliousness and when the appetite and stomach seem clogged eat nothing but fruit for an entire day and see how much better you feel.

The more sedentary the occupation the more necessary fruits become! Old persons need quantities of the subacid fruits to counteract hardening of the arteries and high blood pressure. Children can use all fruits if they are ripe, strained or the coarse, seedy portions removed. Spend more money on fruit and less on meat.

"Woman and the New Race"
By Margaret Sanger.
This book, just published, is Margaret Sanger's greatest effort for the birth control movement. It contains the very essence of her life's work. It pleads and instructs the women of the world in the greatest step of their generations. "WOMAN AND THE NEW RACE" contains the sum total of her experience—the knowledge she dared to utter and print. The knowledge for which she faced jail and fought through every court to establish as women's inalienable right to know.

Ice-Box Hints

NEVER put warm food or warm dishes into the ice box.

IT is economy in the long run to keep the ice compartment well filled.

AVOID keeping foods in the compartment with the ice, as the melting of the ice is increased every time the door is opened

KEEP the drain pipe of the ice box clean by flushing with hot water and cleaning with a long-handled brush

WASH out the ice box frequently with hot water, using two tablespoons of washing soda to each gallon of water; rinse and dry thoroughly.

DO not cover the ice with ice blankets, newspapers or cloth While they prevent the ice melting they also make the ice chest less cool.

SELECT fairly thin dishes for use in the ice box, for thick dishes take up and hold the cold. Dishes of enamelware or glass are better than those of heavy earthenware

Household Helps

Soaking Vegetables.

IF vegetables have to stand after paring cover them completely with cold water to prevent wilting and discoloration.

Steamed Cocoanut.

DRY cocoanut can be made very much like the fresh article by steaming it for half an hour in a colander.

Old Shoe Strings.

WHEN the edges of shoe laces begin to fray trim them off, lap the trimmed ends about an inch and sew them firmly together with thread of the same color.

Peeling Tomatoes.

PRICK some holes in the bottom of the tomatoes with a fork and hold them over the fire for an instant. This will crack the skin and make them easier to peel.

Old Veils Like New.

OLD crepe veils can be made almost like new by holding in both hands and passing them several times through the steam from a teakettle spout.

Soup Without Fat.

TO remove the fat from soup intended for a delicate stomach place a fine wire sieve on the ice until it is thoroughly chilled and pour the soup through this.

Dr. Lawton's Guaranteed FAT REDUCER FOR MEN AND WOMEN

Tested Cabbage Recipes

By Mary Lee Swann,
The Well-Known Writer and Lecturer on Cooking.

White and Blue Cabbage Salad

FINELY shred equal parts of blue and white cabbage. Soak in ice water ½ hour and then drain well. Mix with favorite salad dressing

Cabbage and Green Pepper Salad.

MIX 2 parts finely shredded cabbage and 1 part finely chopped green pepper and moisten with salad dressing.

Hot Slaw.

MIX 1 tablespoon flour and 1 tablespoon sugar. Add 1 teaspoon salt, a dash each of pepper and mustard and 1 slightly beaten egg. Add a scant cup of milk and stir over hot water until thick. Add ½ cup mild vinegar and continue stirring a minute longer. Add 3 cups chopped cooked cabbage and reheat.

Pepper and Cabbage Relish.

REMOVE the stems and seeds from 6 large green peppers and 1 red pepper. Remove the outside leaves and hard centre from a cabbage and cut in pieces. Chop the cabbage and peppers, add 2 tablespoons of white mustard seed, 2 tablespoons salt, 2 tablespoons brown sugar and cold vinegar to cover. Store in sterilized jars.

Cabbage au Gratin.

COOK cabbage in boiling salted water until tender, about ½ hour. Drain, chop and measure 3 cups. Melt 2 tablespoons butter, add 2 tablespoons flour and blend well. Add 1 teaspoon salt and a dash of pepper. Add 1½ cups milk and stir until smooth and creamy. Add cabbage and 1 hard-cooked egg which has been pressed through a potato ricer. Pour into a well-buttered baking dish and sprinkle with ½ cup buttered bread crumbs

Creamed Cabbage.

PICK over and wash cabbage carefully. Cook in boiling salted water until tender. Drain and add ¾ cup white sauce to each cup of shredded cabbage. Reheat, sprinkle with paprika and serve.

Smothered Cabbage.

PICK over and wash half a cabbage and pass through a meat chopper. Melt 2 tablespoons butter, add 1 tablespoon flour and blend well. Add ½ cup milk gradually while stirring constantly. Bring to boiling point, and add 1 teaspoon salt, a dash of pepper and the finely chopped cabbage. Mix well, cover, place on slow fire and cook gently about 1 hour.

Swedish Cabbage Soup.

MELT 2 tablespoons drippings. Add 2 cups finely chopped cabbage, ½ cup chopped celery, 1 tablespoon minced carrot, 1 tablespoon chopped onion, a bit of bay leaf and a dash of pepper, and cook 5 minutes. Add 1 quart veal stock and a few small pieces of veal. Cover and cook slowly about ½ hour. Add salt to taste. A bit of mace will improve the flavor of the soup.

An Amazingly Easy Way to Earn $10,000 a Year
TO the average man the $10,000-a-year job is only a dream. Yet to-day thousands of men are earning five times that salaries who were only dreaming of them a short while ago.
For example, J. P. Overstreet, of Denison, Texas, was a police officer earning less than $1,000 a year. Today his earnings are in excess of $12,000 a year. C. W. Campbell, Greensboro, N. C., was formerly a railroad conductor on a small salary—last month his earnings were $1,666.
These men discovered that the big money is in the Selling end of business. And they became Master Salesmen in an amazingly easy way through the help of the National Salesmen's Training Association. This great organization of Top-notch Salesmen and Sales Managers was formed just for the purpose of training men to sell big things. Not ordinary selling positions. To thousands of men it has enabled to step into positions paying

Why You Must Have Beautiful, Well-Kept Hair to be Attractive

1920, THE R. L. W. CO.

EVERYWHERE you go your hair is noticed most critically.

It tells the world what you are.

If you wear your hair becomingly and always have it beautifully clean and well kept, it adds more than anything else to your attractiveness.

Beautiful hair is not a matter of luck, it is simply a matter of care.

Study your hair, take a hand mirror and look at the front, the sides and the back. Try doing it up in various ways. See just how it looks best

A slight change in the way you dress your hair, or in the way you care for it, makes all the difference in the world in its appearance.

In caring for the hair, shampooing is always the most important thing.

It is the shampooing which brings out the real life and lustre, natural wave and color, and makes your hair soft, fresh and luxuriant.

When your hair is dry, dull and heavy, lifeless, stiff and gummy, and the strands cling together, and it feels harsh and disagreeable to the touch, it is because your hair has not been shampooed properly.

When your hair has been shampooed properly, and is thoroughly clean, it will be glossy, smooth and bright, delightfully fresh-looking, soft and silky.

While your hair must have frequent and regular washing, to keep it beautiful, it cannot stand the harsh effect of ordinary soaps. The free alkali in ordinary soaps soon dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and ruins it.

That is why discriminating people use Mulsified Cocoanut Oil Shampoo. This clear, pure, and entirely greaseless product cannot possibly injure and it does not dry the scalp, or make the hair brittle, no matter how often you use it.

If you want to see how really beautiful you can make your hair look, just

Follow This Simple Method

FIRST, wet the hair and scalp in clear, warm water.

Then, apply a little Mulsified Cocoanut Oil Shampoo, rubbing it in thoroughly, all over the scalp and throughout the entire length, down to the ends of the hair.

Rub the Lather In Thoroughly

TWO or three teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather. This should be rubbed in thoroughly and briskly with the finger tips, so as to loosen the dandruff and small particles of dust and dirt that stick to the scalp.

When you have done this, rinse the hair and scalp thoroughly, using clear, fresh warm water. Then use another application of Mulsified.

You can easily tell when the hair is perfectly clean, for it will be soft and silky in the water.

Rinse the Hair Thoroughly

THIS is very important. After the final washing the hair and scalp should be rinsed in at least two changes of good warm water and, followed with a rinsing in cold water.

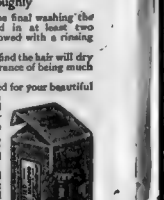
After a Mulsified shampoo, you will find the hair will dry quickly and evenly and have the appearance of being much thicker and heavier than it is.

If you want to always be remembered for your beautiful well-kept hair, make it a rule to set a certain day each week for a Mulsified Cocoanut Oil Shampoo. This regular weekly shampooing will keep the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, fresh looking and fluffy, wavy and easy to manage, and it will be noticed and admired by everyone.

You can get Mulsified Cocoanut Oil Shampoo at any drug store or toilet goods counter. A 4-ounce bottle should last for months.

Splendid for children.

Fine for men.



WATKINS MULSIFIED COCOANUT OIL SHAMPOO

Your Hair Should Be Dressed so as to Emphasize Your Best Lines and Reduce Your Worst Ones

Begin by studying your profile. If you have a long face, do not part your hair on the top of your head; if you have a round, fat face, do not fluff your hair out too much at the sides; if your face is very thin and long, then you should fluff your hair out at the sides. The women with the full face and double chin should wear her hair high. All these and other individual features must be taken into consideration in selecting the proper hairdress. Above all, simplicity should prevail. You are always most attractive when your hair looks most natural—when it looks most like you.

La Pompadour—the Powder Puff of History!

The Beauty With the Soul of Bisque Who Loved Porcelain Flowers—MANON LESCAUT Who Had All Her Daintiness Plus a Warm, Human Heart—And the Face Powder That Re-incarnates for Every Woman All the Seductive Loveliness of Both.

JEANNE Antoinette Poisson le Normant D'Etoiles, Marquise de Pompadour and "Maitresse en titre" of His Majesty King Louis the Fifteenth of France, is one of the half dozen women who will live in the memory of mankind as long as memory endures.

This is because the Pompadour was less a woman than an eternal symbol. De Montesquieu, out of his truly infernal genius for labelling, called her "The Powder Puff of History."

Jeanne, Marquis de Pompadour, embodied in one fragrant, soft, yielding, lovely woman's body all that is daintiest, most alluring, seductive and exquisite. She was as delicious as the sheen on the breast of doves, delicate as the dust on the wings of the moon moth.

It was the Pompadour who invented that dainty porcelain we call Sevres. She gave her exquisite body to the King—but her mind was in the laboratory. It was there that her strange soul found its freedom and its reason for being.

For the Pompadour's soul was bisque and among the frail and wonderful porcelains it created it ceased to be homesick.

The beautiful castle of Bellevue in France was made for her. When Bellevue was finished the King went there to sup. The Pompadour conducted him to a magnificent salon lighted by thousands of golden candles. Inumerable flowers spread their petals and their perfumes around—roses and pinks, orchids and lilies vied with each other in splendor and fragrance. The King wished to make a bouquet for the Marquise—but whenever he attempted to pick a flower he felt the cold rigidity of porcelain.

Every flower there was a bloom from the furnaces of Sevres! Every bloom was beautiful—and no bloom was real!

Half a dozen women, six only, we said at the beginning of this article, are immortal. Pompadour is one—MANON LESCAUT another and the greater.

MANON LESCAUT grips the hearts of men because she had all the daintiness, all the delicacy, all the cobweb, moonshine glamour of the Pompadour—plus the human reality that delectable Marquise lacked.

At any feast of Manon's, King Louis would have plucked no cold, porcelain blossoms. He would have picked only tender realities!

A. Bourjois & Co., the great French chemists, have re-incarnated all the loveliness of MANON LESCAUT in an exquisite Face Powder. Pompadour's garden of flowers was only cold clay!

The woman who uses Bourjois' MANON LESCAUT Face Powder owns the clear pallor of the lily itself, the blush of the opening rose, the bloom of the peach blossom—the reality of all fair flowers.

Clip the coupon on this page and see for yourself how perfectly all the charms of MANON LESCAUT have been caught in the one face powder that is worthy to bear her name.

For your own good learn how utterly incapable of harm is Bourjois' MANON LESCAUT Face Powder even though your skin be most delicate.

Enjoy the satisfaction of the certain protection it gives against dirt and dust, wind and sun, and every other complexion foe.

Wrap yourself in the indescribably seductive fragrance which proclaims the innate refinement of every MANON LESCAUT user.

Introduce your skin to the delights and benefits of a powder so soft, so fine, so perfectly pure that its close-clinging caress is well nigh invisible.

The superlative excellencies of Bourjois' MANON LESCAUT Face Powder make it cost more to produce than any other powder. Yet you can buy it for less than inferior, harmful powders!

Made in only one grade of perfect purity, but in five different shades to provide a Powder for Every Complexion:—White, Naturelle, Rose, Rachel—and "Peaches and Cream"—for Extreme Brunettes.

That Well-Groomed Gloss
Which Men Admire
Results from Olive Oil

Use this Olive Oil Shampoo and Prove It

How to make hair glossy—this all-important question is easily answered. How to give it silky texture and satiny gloss—just mail the coupon for a trial bottle of Palmolive Shampoo and learn.

Follow directions. We also send you a wonderful booklet explaining how proper shampooing will beautify your hair. The Free Trial bottle contains more than enough for one luxurious shampoo, which will leave your hair gloriously soft and silky. You will be delighted with its all-admired, well-groomed, glossy appearance.

You get in Palmolive Shampoo a blending of palm, olive and coconut oils. The combination provides a wonderful beautifier as well as the most thorough of cleansers. It works a transformation in the appearance of your hair.

What olive oil does

The first advice of a specialist is the use of olive oil to make hair grow. Olive oil, with its penetrating, yet soothing, effect, goes right to the roots of the hair. Combined with the cleansing properties of Palmolive Shampoo it loosens and removes the scales of dead skin from the scalp pores. By lubricating and softening it makes possible the normal circulation of blood, which stimulates the growth of hair and gives it natural, healthy gloss.

When you have dried and brushed your hair, let your mirror prove results. You see gloss, softness and silky abundance—a real transformation. Every such treatment will show further improvement.

How to Use Palmolive

Wet hair thoroughly in clear water and massage Palmolive Shampoo into your hair with the tips of your fingers. Move the scalp back and forth, which will stimulate the circulation of blood to feed the tiny hair roots. The olive oil has cleared the way. The shampoo will make a stiff, rich lather, which envelops your head like a cap.

Wash the whole length of hair in this lather, rinse and then repeat the operation. Let the final rinsings be thorough and finish with cold water. Dry by shaking and fanning.

Mail Coupon Today for Free Trial Bottle

Not a cent required. We send you this free trial-sized bottle of Palmolive Shampoo absolutely free, all charges prepaid. A specially prepared booklet comes with it, which not only explains scientific shampooing but tells how you can care for your hair at home just as effectively as high-priced scalp specialists might.

Just sign your name on the coupon, send it, and the trial bottle and special booklet come free, by return mail—your introduction to the famous, beautifying olive oil shampoo and the way to use it.
